An Analysis of Tantrayana (Vajrayana)

Prof. P. G. Yogi

Tantra is a discipline, a method and study. It is based on a rational foundation, is conceivable in theoretical consciousness and realizable through yogic experiences. Ironically, however, there are those who have ignored these points and picked up bits from particular sadhanas, parts of which are apparently vulgar and obscene, and come to the conclusion that Tantrik spiritual practices resort to sexual indulgence. Before entering further into this debate, it needs to be mentioned here that in the Tantras, the ideal of womanhood has been epitomized and raised to the exalted position of motherhood which in itself is unique in the history of spiritual literature of the world. Moreover, it is clearly stated in the Tantras that the secret of life lies in sexual control and death in sexual indulgence (Matanaram Brinda puro, savitaram Jinda Dhanavan).

As against the conventional ascetic disciplines, the Tantras uphold the theory of sublimation in which asceticism has been equated with sexuality. In this theory, desire itself is subjected to rigorous discipline and used to conquer desire. There are others who subscribe anything ugly, erotic, spiritualistic and magical to the Tantras. They produce fantastic stories garnished with absurd episodes relating to astral plane and connect them to Tantras. They forget that Tantra is a meta-science (surya-vimart) dealing with consciousness, variable at every stage of spiritual experience. Further, the realization of supreme Truth which will give a true perspective of the Tantras has been interpreted in various ways. Tantra has been analyzed as a critique of experience. Consciousness in different aspects plays a vital role in the philosophy of the Tantras and experience is the guideline which analyzes and determines the nature of the said consciousness, both as the empirical and in the transcendental. Experiences in the Tantras may also be analyzed in terms of consciousness, conscious of itself. A 'Tantra aspirant must be intelligent (dakṣa), have his senses in control (līttāsti), abstaining from injuries to all beings (Sarva bhimā vinimmakta), ever doing good to all (Sarva prantīhāra), a believer in the self as existence (atlīla), have faith and refuge to Brahman (Brahmāv-adī. Brahmat parama) and who is a non-dualist (dvaitāśīna).

Further, intellectual apprehension of the Tantras, strenuous self-sacrifice, unflinching devotion to sāstras and their teachings, observance of the ritual and yogika practices are regarded as efficient methods of approach to Śiva, the supreme self. Three ways to realization, those of Sambhava, Sākta and Ānava, are recognized in Kāmarāja Sāivism, together with the Śiva sāiva idea of freedom have been discussed. It is interesting to note that the pratyabhijña school of Kāmarāja Sāivism has close affinity to the Saṅkhyā–Vaishnavism of the eastern regions, particularly of Bengal and Assam. In this context, the six cakras (Saṅkhyā), piercing of the cakras (Saṅkhyā–bheda), the power as Kundalini and the role of Kundalini in reawakening the latent consciousness and self-analysis. The subject-contexts reveal the outline of an Indian system of thought which is resourceful in experience, rich in contents and colourful in many of the inner secrets of Indian culture. It is realistic in attitude, practical in application and sublime in spiritual aspiration. In this system, nothing is rejected as completely lost, rather, everything is accepted and hence accommodated in its respective potential value. It is a living philosophy whose true spirit is now lost. May be not lost, but it is definitely ill-conceived, misinterpreted and badly practised. In the modern world crisis, it had got a definite role to play and delivers a message of hope to problem-stricken humanity. The influence of Tantras over the people from the past to the present is significant to note. 'Tantra', 'Maṇtra' and 'Yona' are sometimes used as synonyms for each other, but the Yantra aspect of the Tantras will not be discussed in this work and Maṇtra will only be referred to in a specimen manner. Even the terms 'Agama' and 'Tantra' are sometimes used in the same sense as the Veda is sometimes referred to as 'Nigāha'. The scope of Tantra is, however, much wider than that of Agama as the former deals with as many as twenty-five subjects such as the knowledge of Brahman as consciousness, the nature of the Brahman as consciousness, the principle of creation, maintenance and destruction of the world, concealment and grace etc. Agama, on the other hand, covers only seven of the said twenty-five subjects. In this connection, it might be of interest to note that the Yamala precede the Tantras and deals with only five of the subjects covered by the Tantras.

The term 'Tantra' is also sometimes used to mean a system having predominance of Saktās (power) while Agama bears an overtone of Śiva in terms of knowledge. It is, however, a recognized fact that in the philosophy of Tantra, consciousness as power and that of Sāṃkhya, are identical in the sense that in the Tantras, consciousness as power is always considered as being conscious of itself as 'I' in terms of Siva. Hence, the term 'Tantra' is used in the general sense as accommodating all other aforesaid meanings it covers. The prime object of this work is to exhibit the philosophy of Tantras in general terms of consciousness as power and gaining experience thereof. However, like the Vedas, the base of the Tantra is revelation, or in other words, consciousness involving knowledge as a transcendent act. Hence the Agamas or Tantras fall within the fold of Sautra Sastras (that which is heard) or revealed scriptures. To discuss and interpret saxtras or scriptures from the historical point of view is difficult. The said scriptures are not supposed to have originated in time nor are they creations of ordinary human consciousness; such scriptures are believed to be of divine origin. Further, they are called eternal and immutable, they are what they are - pure and simple.

Like the Vedas, the Tantras or the Agamas are designated as Sautra Sastras brought down to us from time immemorial through spiritual tradition. Outwardly, these scriptures denote injunctions (niyama) and practices (viđā) and essentially connote the nature of being revealed and revealing at the same time. Spiritually, they are some pure experience concepts realizable in terms of revelations of the mysteries of men and matter. Ethically they are the directive principles determining what is good and what is bad in the empirical. But then, there are the complications of a world to live in and consciousness to know and survice. Culture expresses itself in manners, customs, patterns of belief, ways of life, religions, philosophical thinking, etc. Civilization is sometimes measured by the degree of material prosperity. Indian culture or civilization is broadly represented by two diverse traditions - Aryan Śāstra and non-Aryan śstra. The term śstra is synonymous to Agamika or Tantrika even though the term Veda is at times used for both Agama and Nigama. It should be noted here that the Aryan Śāstra culture is not very different from some of the main Agamika and Tantrika practices. Yoga (concentration), Asanābhandha, Garuda (the vehicle of Vistōr), Conch Shell (Samkha), Conch Bangle (Sakha), Altars (Vedi) Posts (Yapa), Sivalinga (symbol of Siva), the image of Siva as Pasupati and seals on similar other finds in archaeological excavations bear testimony to the fact that the Indus Valley Civilization is not at least anti-Sastra. There are different phases of cultural patterns of a particular civilization which alternate in different ages and finally evolve into a full-fledged system covering within itself the history of thought of that period. Similarly, Indian culture had to pass through different phases such as Agamika or Tantrika omm Śāstra, Jaina, Buddha and the like. Notwithwading the unity of thought within the six systems of Indian philosophy (sad-darsana), there are differences within them not only in details of the discussion of a particular problem but also in some of the basic concepts. These differences crop up even within a particular system in the interpretations that different commentators have made of them. All these show a progressive trend of the Indian mind. The asta-tantra and asta-murti concepts of the Puranas bring out the eminent aspect of the supreme God, Siva, and the same concept is fleshed out again in the Mahabharata when it says:

Bhut-adhyayam samvatsarpravaheti saptatattvakutaksah adhyayam deva-vedantike-sadhvatye ksherti ca

The Tantrika ritual includes the asta-murti puja of Siva in the eight forms of Siva: Earth (Sarva), Water (Bhava), Fire (Rudra), Air (Ugra), Ether (Bhuma), Sky (Puṣpa), Water (Isana), and Moon (Maha). The concept of Siva finds expression in the famous Mahimah stotram of Purandara where the eight aspects of Siva are named and depicted as the earlier explanation with the only difference lying in the replacement of Yajamana with Atman. This representation of Siva as Atman or Purusa is also mentioned in the Siva Narayana. In his Sākta Philosophy, M. M. Gopinatha Kaviraja has stated: Siva and Sakti are conceived as constituting the two aspects of one and the same divine principle, inalienably associated and essentially identical. Siva is the agent, Sakti is the instrument. One is transcendent, the other immanent. The cosmic manifestations of Sakti is, however, in essence, the manifestation of Siva himself and is conceived as immanent. It is further to be noted here that from the point of view of manifestation, Siva cannot even be conceived of as other than Sakti. The Asta-tantra concept of Siva finds prominence in the works of Kalisasa, viz. Abhijnana-sakuntalam, Malavijñāna-mitrā and Kumaranambikāvam (cf. 1.57, vi. 26).

The Tantras are not ancient authentic religious scriptures of the Aryan race and they are not accepted as religious scriptures throughout India. This so-called scripture or Sastra is the creation of Bengalese and its injunctions have been in practice only in Bengal (Gauda). The Bengalees are believers of self-determination (Swatantra) and have full confidence in their own strength and the Tantras propound precisely such an attitude towards life.

Amongst the Mahayana Buddhists, worship of deities such as Tara, Vajrapani, Ksetrapala and others have been in vogue and there are mantras, vijas and japa in Mahayana Buddhism prescribed for propitiating the same. So, if in the Hindu Tantras, there are similar gods and goddesses worshipped with specific mantras, vijas and japas, Hindu Tantra must have originated from the Mahayana sect of Buddhism.

19
The aboriginal tribes in India are worshippers of Sakti, spirits, ghosts, serpents, trees and the like and such practices are found in the tradition of Tantrika worship too. Hence, the Tantras owe their origin to the so-called barbaric tradition. The influence of Tantrika tradition is found not only in Bengal but throughout India. That the Tantras follow Mahayana Buddhism is also untenable from historical/traditional point of view in the same way that the belief that Mahayana Buddhism is derived from Tantra is unacceptable. Similarity of some of the religious practices is after all no proof of one being derived from the other. Whether the Hindu mind was moved, drawn and attracted by the teachings of Buddhism only and not with its fundamental tenets, in other words, should the Hindus pay obeisance to Buddhist Gods for beauty, victory, glory and destruction of foes or strive for Buddha Nirvana? There is a vast difference between the yoga undertaken for the extinction of all desires and the yoga practiced for acquisition of power, wealth and destruction of foes. It is true that in a particular type of Tantrika sadhana, there is a provision for practices (kriya) alleged to be maleficent such as Marana, Ucchana, Vasikaranana and Stambhavasana. These are also called abicara, but it is specifically stated in the Tantras that these practices should never be directed or motivated towards the satisfaction of any selfish end. Tantras, being primarily practical and realistic in nature, provide such practices as a guard against evil doers and doing. Further, the said practices have no physical bearing. They work only in the psychical region.

The Bhagavadgita preaches niskama karma (right to work only and not to the fruits thereof) which might lead to the acquisition of knowledge. This is akin to the Buddha's philosophy of Nirvana. On this account, can any body say that the Bhagavadgita also provides for Sakama Karma (works with some object in view i.e. work for power, wealth, beauty etc.) which is contrary to the spirit of Buddhism. Moreover, Hinduism, of all religions, provides different forms of religious practices for persons having different dispositions and competence (adhikara). This also does not fit in with the principles and practices of Buddhism. In the above context, how is it possible for them to explain the Sakyamuni's renunciation (Vaishrava), his loss of faith in Hinduism and his discovery of the new path whereby man could escape infinities of old age and death and achieve the final extinction of sorrows, in line with the practices of the Tantras? Lalita-vistara, the biography of Sakyamuni, states that Buddha was well conversant with Nigama, Puranas, Itihana and the Vedas. When, both, the Vedas and Nigama are mentioned in the same context, the latter term refers to the Tantras which goes by the names Agama and Nigama. In light of this fact, the belief that Hindu Tantras originate from the Mahayana sect of Buddhism are rendered defunct. Again, Sakyamuni is said to have addressed the Bodhisattas thus: "There are fouwho seek protection of and pay obeisance to Bedna, Indra, Rudra, Visnu, the Dae, Kalidéyé, Mother Kayayayi, Goparati and others. Some perform tapasya (ascetic practices) in the cremation ground and at the crossing of four roads." Speaking of the practices of heretics, he had once mentioned the use of wine and flesh, which it practices in some special form of Tantrika adhiana. Had not the Tantrika form of worship, then, been in existence before the advent of Sakya Mani? (Lavaliyaravat xi. ch. iv. sá 313)

It may be said that the strength of the above-mentioned analogical arguments depends on the fundamental points of agreement between the Tantras and Buddhism; but no such agreement or similarity is found between them save and except some superficial points in regard to the worship of some of the Gods and goddesses. Even in this context, it may be said that there are cases where there is no similarity between the viyamàtras, as in the case of Nila-Saratavar, of the two systems. In spite of these fundamental differences, it cannot be ignored that Buddhism and Tantrism grew on Indian soil and it is not impossible that in the process of cultural synthesis, there was mutual exchange of ideas just as we find similarities in the subsequent period of history between Vajrayana, Sahajayana, Mantrayana, Natha and Samajya cols of Buddhism on the one hand and Saranam on the other.

Who are the persons called barbaric Adivinitis? Should we suppose that Bengalee pandits composed the Tantra sástra in imitation of Datrtis, inhabiting the distant South? Or, Should we suppose that the Tantra system was adapted from the Mundas, Sanchals, Caros, Meshees, Kuches, Khasias and the primitive inhabitants of Assam? Such interpretations are definitely absurd. The concept of Saké is found almost in every literary work from India. It is in the Vedas, Samhitas, Upanishads, Mahabharata, Puranas and other literatures. Moreover, the Goddess Saké is worshipped in different forms throughout India - is Kamalihya, Vindya Hills, Kasi, Vindavasa, Rajasthán, Tihar, Hatidwar and so on. A historical survey of religious practices prevailing in ancient India does not support the view that because Tantras advocates the practice of Saké, therefore it is of recent origin and that the advocates of this sástra are Bengalees. Sometimes, it is even believed that Yogni Tantra is of recent origin and at the most only three hundred years old. This is obviously an incorrect assessment since Raghunandana Bhratadhara, the great Smara, and Krsnaandada Bhandaraja Agasvaragshya, who were contemporaries of Sri Cáciya, have referred to Yogini Tantra as an authentic work on the Tantra in their works, Smritartha and Tantra-nar. There are also scholars who are of the opinion that because the term Tantra is not specifically mentioned in Svarga-vargya by Amárakóna Tantras, therefore it is not considered as an authentic scripture. But it should be noted here that the name of some of ancient scriptures too have not been mentioned there. Those scholars have also not noticed in the Nanartha-varga of the said work, there is a mention of Agama Sutra, which is but another name for Tantra.

Madhavacarya, the commentator of the Vedas, in dealing with the Patanjali system in his compilation of different systems of Indian philosophy, named Sarva-Dvraya-Samgraha which quoted many passages from the Tantra Sutras, particularly with reference to what is called the ten fold disposition (Dasaavidhi Swadakara). Acharya Vacaspati Minta, the great commentator of the six systems of Indian philosophy, has spoken of the practice of meditation (Dhyana) as of Tantra origin. Srimat-Samkaraacarya, in his Sariraka-Bhasya, mentions the determination of six bodily centres (Sarirakaas) of the Tantra. It is hardly necessary to say that one of three great Acaryas if a Bengali. Before the compilation of Krsnaanadas Tantra Sara, there have been many compilers of Tantras such as Raghavanaada, Raghavabhatta, Virupaks, Govind Bhatta to mention only a few. Krsnaanadas, in his observation of the Goddesses Nila Samavati featured in Tantra Sara, reveals that even Samkaracarya himself claimed that the famous hymns of Sakti (Ananda Lahari and Daksinamurt-stotra) are his works. Besides, there are many important compilations of Tantras such as Ramacand-candrika, passages from which have been quoted by Vacaspati Minta in the chapter of Varnani Puja in his Kritiya-cintamani which proves the antiquity of the Tantra, Mantra, Muk-tavali, Sara-Samgraha, Bhasuvanavari-paritri, SaradvidAlchemy, Tripura-siva samuccaya, svacchanda-sangriha, Sara-samuccaya, Mantra-tantra-pralika and others. These compilations were prepared long before the time of Krsnaanada and Raghunandana. Harita says: “Now we shall explain Dhema.
Dhema is based on the authority of Suri. Suri is of two kinds – Yadviga and Tantrika.” Tantra-sutra, in some authoritative works, is referred to by the terms Raharya (myicism) and Vidiya (metascience) in addition to Agama and Nigama which again is used in some context in lieu of the Vedas. There is a great Tantrika scripture called ‘Svayam’. One of its commentaries is the great Abhinavagupta, the propounder of Ksmru Sarivam, otherwise called Pratyabhijna. Krsnaanada has quoted some of the sutras of the said Agama as authoritative. This shows the affinity between Ksmru Pratyabhijna and Sakta-vaitavika prevalent in the eastern region of India.

SOME OPINIONS ON THE TANTRAS

Professor Masaharu Asakawa, in his History of Religion in Ancient India, after citing Baja Bana in evidence of Tantrika worship at the time of Asoka (240 BC), says that Tantra appeared even before Nagarjuna (220 AD) and that it has been successful in absorbing Buddhism despite all efforts to the contrary. In fact, as regards Buddhism, Tantra stands for a Hindu conquest. Further, in Tara-Tantra, it is stated that the Buddha and Vaisistha were Tantrika seers and Khalavbhavavas. Prof. Heyman Wilson says that the Tantrika tradition is not the creation of a day, it has a long history behind it. Creation, maintenance and dissolution, propitiation of Gods and Goddesses, religious and spiritual practices, Purusarcanas, sat karma, dhyana, yoga and other similar practices have been discussed in the Tantras (see Varahi-Tantra). Prof. Cowell.believes that the Tantras form a highly esteemed branch of literature. Sir Monier Williams, in his Indian Wisdom, has mentioned the Tantras and spoken ill of them though some of his findings are believed to be improperly presented.

Tantra Sastra is meant for all classes irrespective of caste, creed and sex. In this system, sex is no bar against spiritual initiations. It is stated in the Tantras that far from the Vaidika exclusiveness, the practice of family tradition is essential for all two-footed beings. By family is meant persons coming from a particular specific stock and tradition, in this context, consists of some long-standing practices both in the social and the spiritual.

Tantra sastra affords to all freedom to be engaged in spiritual practice according to one’s competence and shows the practical method which would qualify the spiritual aspirant (sadhak) to proceed along the higher path of knowledge (Jhaa marga) - knowledge in terms of experience as distinguished from intellectual theorizing alone. Tantra is above all, a metascience, primarily concerned with the performance of rituals aiming at liberation, for, according to Tantra, not only theorizing, but also practice in proper direction is indispensable for gaining experience and freedom.

Tantra-sastra is primarily a sadhana-sastra, and all religions recognize spiritual practice (sadhana). The Tantra claims to be thoroughly practical in the sense that it affords direct proof of spiritual practices. Tantra also bears great affinity with the art of medicine (bhisisaya) in so far as its practice outlook is concerned. Apart from primarily practical and realistic attitude of the Tantras, the rational side of this grand system is well-developed. Tantra believes in Right and Competency (adikara and yogasta) of the spiritual aspirants. The sacramental energy of the mantra, even when the spiritual preceptor (Guru) has venerated it with consciousness depends on the competency of the aspirant for its efficacy. Tantra believes in different stages of spiritual progress such as japa, dhyana, bhava and Brahma-sadhana which is the highest state of mind. For the Brahmanjana, one who has realized Brahma, there is no difference in these stages. Tantra is vehemently opposed to any sort of blindless, mechanical formality. It is pointedly stated in the Tantras liberation comes only through tantric-bhava or intellectual conviction of the sattva. Knowledge of the Brahman cannot be attained without self-purification and for such self-purification, Tantra provides means taking cognizance of the secret spirit of the age (kala-dharma). Tantra-sastra speaks of spiritual experience constituting of the fourth stage - Turiya state of con-sciences, through the practice of Yoga, Hatha yoga and various other forms of spiritual training have been admitted in the Tantras. Prof. De La Vallee Poussin, speaking in context of Buddhist Tantras, remarks that the essential concepts of Tantra are metaphysical and subtle in character. His understanding is also applicable to the Hindu Tantras, where, for instance, the significance of Sakti-Tantra, Mantra-Tantra, Yoga-Tantra, the principle of Kundalini, Bijamatrika and the like are highly subtle, metaphysical and esoteric in nature. Besides, the technical terms or concepts such as yantra, mantra, muda, nyasa, sadhana, upasana, yoga, para tantra and sa-cakra are used in the Tantras and practiced by the Sadhakas (spiritual aspirants) demonstrating the technical character of Tantras.

The Tantras, at present, are available in the Indian scriptures and also in Tibetan and Chinese records. It may be said that the Tantras are of divine origin, realized and realizable in super-sensuous experience of the yogins, practiced by Sadhakas and expressed in manners, customs and religious behavior of the tradition. Tantra forms an essential part of the dynamic aspect of Indian culture. Both, in philosophic speculation and religious practices, it exhibits that spiritual renunciation (nirvikaya) and material progress (bhaya dya) go side by side in the history of Indian thought and the art of living.

***

TANTRA IN PUAL BUDDHISM

TAN'TAM - A thread, main point, a literary work, religious treatise. Ab. 523, 878, 882, pat 82. Tantrayana, a weaver (Ab. 507 pat 82), Ananta Tantrarasanakara, ocean of boundless literature (vuttotaya)

TANTI (f) - A string, lice cord, the string of a tune, sacred vam, a passage from a sacred text Ab. 882, 990, st. tanti (Dbh. 544). Tanti is in great extent a synonym of Pali which see, Tantra dhamma co tanti-atha. Here the law means the scriptures: Tattvagardana, scriptural terms (vi.). Tantilaknam Kanti Avokkamavvar Wihout overstepping any Pali idiom (vi.) Tantiyala, adopted to the sacred texts (ALW1v). Sansasonambodhi pi teptukam, Buddharaasramam tantim asupento Madaghi bhayan eva, aripi: the supramore Buddha when elevating his arms conten- raint in the Tripikaka in a text 46d so in the Madagidi lan- guage (ALW, I.V. 30mp, vi, note). The Dighamkhyo is called tanti, a text (Duru)

24
TANTRA IN PALI BUDDHISM

The Awakened One is said to have achieved a distinction of being the Buddha. Pali Buddhism preserves the traditions in a discourse with Upaka prior to his running of the wheel of Dhamma (Dhammacakkapavattana). Gautama the Buddha declares the eminence:

Victorious one all omniscient am I.
Among all things defiled.
Leaving all through death of craving freed.
By knowing for myself whom should I follow.
For me there is no teacher.
One like me does not exist.
In the world with its dross no one equals me.
For I am perfected in the world.
The Teacher supreme am I.
I alone am all awakened.
Become cool am I. Nirvana attained.

The above sayings explicitly refer to the core of the Tantra practice tending to retroversion (paravritti). A successful practitioner confidently declares, "No one equals me. I am all awakened." These are the characteristics of one who has regained his self-nature by freeing the mind from cravings and not instances of boasting or vanity of the Gautama the Buddha.

The Buddhist literature delves on measures which help in realizing a man's self-nature. The life force of a being emerges out of a bindu and dissolves into it and arrives at the condition from which it originates. This is retroversion (or matter). In the depths of the mind, similar retroversion function and should be borne in mind that retroversion is distinct from extraversion (Pravritti) and introversion (avritti). Living beings, according to Buddha, are the conglomeration of mind and matter (nama-rupa) with a strong attachment (upadana) under latent impressions (Samskara) of ignorance about their self-nature. A being is easily delighted by pleasures and remains stuck in the cycle of life and death. A being fails to know what is deathlessness and finds pleasure in the realm of Maya under the letters of craving.

The Awakened One, knowing himself, becomes "Victorious" (Jina). He claims: "Victorious one all, omniscient am I...by knowing for myself." Man possesses omniscience but fails to realize it because of his ignorance. The Tantra teaches one how to visualize the self-nature (Sva-bhava) which is essencelessness (nihsva-bhava). He who visualizes this essencelessness is Awakened from the slumber of ignorance.

Gautama exclaims:

This path through every side I have won.

Enough, why should I make it known?

By self with lust and hate consumed.

This dharma is not stream,

While deep, difficult to see delicate.

Unless it will be by passion slave,

Cloaked in the mask of ignorance.

The teachings of Buddha are also 'wading on against stream', but those are aids to develop vision (kakshika) and awareness of it-end (sama karani). His followers thereby possess an appropriate contemplation to concentrate on the source or root of beings in the worlds (pabhavatthakata) for right sight (Sammajethi) and right concentration (Sammajamadhi). The Middle (sava-Shruti) of beings is correctly visualized by going on against the stream. In other words, practices are done in the method of retracement which is followed in the Tañeta. The Tañeta seeks to extinguish five passions to attain Buddhahood as the achiever exclaims, "B msec cool are 1 Nirvana attained."

With undaunted confidence, Buddha proclaims deathlessness among the blind on account of ignorance. Therefore, Gautama Buddha turns the Dhamma-acakka in Liptetana at Sarnath, Varanasi for the welfare of all beings of the world:

Evam me Saram - Evam Samajam Bhagava
Barmanayam vibhati Sisattvam meجبUTE

Thy have I heard - Once the blessed one went in the evening near Varanasi, at Sipataana in the Deer park

Taraññha Bhagava Panaññhaye hēkku uoamensi
Sod me hēkkhane anta phāma jātra na sāhābha

Kāsa me dor

Then, the blessed one addressed the company of five Bhikkhus. Bhikkhus, these two extremes should not be followed by one who has gone out of home to be homeless life. What two?

Sisattvam kameva samayika, Nhaya, govena parhajjana.,
The giving was the pleasure of sense which is low, vulgar, worldly, unworthy and harmful, and the giving into self-mortification which is painful, unworthy and harmful. O Bhikkhu, by avoiding these two extremes the Tathagata has found out that middle which gives the vision, which gives the knowledge, which tends the peace, higher wisdom, enlightenment and Nibbana.

Kaccha ceto Bhikkhave maphismsa patipada Tathagatena abhasambuddha, cakkhu karani nana karani, upasamaya, abhinneyya, sambodiya Nibbano samavattati Ayam sammadattih, Sammadakkhippo, samma vaca, Sammaccarammanto, samma ajivo, sammattavanto, sammaticcato, sammutohantu, Ayam khe sa bhikkhace, maphimma patipada Tathagatena abhasambuddha cakkhu karani, nana karani, upasamaya, abhinneyya, sambodiya Nibbano samavattati.

And what, O Bhikkhu, is that middle path found by the Tathagata, which gives wisdom, which gives knowledge, which tends to peace, higher wisdom, enlightenment and Nibbana? Is it this very noble right-fold path, namely, right view, right aspiration, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, right concentration? This, O Bhikkhu, is that middle path which is found by the Tathagata, which gives vision, which gives knowledge, which tends to peace, higher wisdom, enlightenment and Nibbana.

Idam kho panu Bhikkhavo dukkham arjya uccaam; jati pi dukkho, jerepi dukkho, sonyo pi dukkho, maranam pi, apivyo panaya dukkho, pisehe sapaya dukkho, parinnatam lekkha sam pi dukkham, Samakkhiyo, panupanakkhandada dukkho.

Now this, O Bhikkhu, is the Arjya (noble) truth of suffering: Birth is suffering, decay is suffering, death is suffering to be verified with things we dislike is suffering, to be separated from things we like is suffering, not to get what one wants, that is dukkha suffering. In short, these five aggregates, which are the objects of grasping are suffering.

Jita ke tena khamato tena layena tato mahamaya yava Brahmano rudda abhidhacchi, atoke dava abhakato lokottaram sampahampi sampavittati, oppamannu eva waro abhavo loke parusahoti atikkamu.
Thus, at that very hour, at that very moment, in an instant of time, the cry reached even to the realm of Brahma and this whole system of ten thousand world systems quaked and quaked again, it was shaken to and fro and an immeasurable, mighty radiance shone forth, surpassing even the effulgence of Devas.

Artha kha Bhagava udamam udanen. "Annasi vasa kha kundanno annasi vasa kha kundanno ti, tī hi dham ayatamato kundanno api Annasakundanno tesa namamahate it.

Therefore, the celestial one uttered this solemn saying, "Kundanno indeed has understood, Kundanno indeed has understood." Thus, it was that the venerable Kundanno who had his name Annasa Kundanno "he who has understood."

"Dhammacakkappavattana Sutta"
The First Sermon

1. Abhaya Sutta and Mangala Sutta - Sunday
2. Ratana Sutta - Monday
3. Maha Sutta - Tuesday
4. Hadda, Moa and Batta Sutta - Wednesday
5. Dhatu Sutta - Thursday
6. Ama Natiya Sutta - Friday
7. Angulika, Bajjha and Pubhisa Sutta - Saturday.

The Sammāsambuddha (Thoroughly Awakened One) sees the world of existence through his wisdom eyes (Buddhacakkhu) and understands the true state of happenings where he sees (Yathābhūtanā-nadana). No dialectic therefore arises and his dhamma is beyond dialectics. The Tantra also disowns any debate or dialectics as it is based on direct visualization of the Truth. The Pali Vinaya Pitaka refers to that state through which Upanasana was uttered by Buddha immediately after attainment of Nirvana. Truly, things grow plain to the ardent meditating Brahman.

Bowing the holt of Brahma does he stand like as the Sun, white, lighting up the city. Likewise, the Tantra aims at the coordination of the mundane (śāman) and the supreme (mukta).

To sum up, it is now evident that the Buddha’s experiences as traditionally depicted in the Pali literature and philosophy bear resemblance with the experiences of an accomplished Tantra practitioner (Ratnapudgala). Entrance of the Tantra in the Buddhist thought is generally said to be a later addition or a phase of later Buddhism since 3-4 century AD.

Gautama is said to have achieved super-natural attributes like bala, vasta, vaisvanarya, abhijna and bodhiyana as his experience, and these details are narrated in the Vinaya Pitaka. These evidences suggest that the nucleus of the Tantra prevails in the Pali Vinaya Pitaka as the earliest source from which it has come down to us.

Seeing the Dhamma is the same as seeing the Lord Buddha himself as the first sermon details, “He who sees the Dhamma, sees Dhamma.”

DHAMMACAKKAPPAVATTANA (TANTRAS)
THE FIRST SERMON OF LORD BUDDHA

The sermon is based on the noble eight-fold path and the four noble truths and forms the foundation of Tantric and many other suttas proclaimed by the Buddha and delivered at Isipatana. The basic teachings of Lord Buddha are full of Tantra. "If it were impossible to cultivate the Good, I would not tell you to do so," said the Buddha. This is indeed a positive, optimistic assurance common to Tantra.

In the vast bulk of Indological and other orientalistic writings of Indo-centric religious thought, practice and literature, serious work on the Tantras has remained so limited and so specialized that they have not come to form a genre within the oriental studies though they are as qualified as, say the Upanishads and the Pali canon. There is no excuse for this omission, unless prudishness, fear of social and scientific opprobrium and other items of pietistic calculi were presented as some. The few cited are perhaps valid excepted because Tantrism is a delicate theme because of its intense and extensive ramifications.

The Buddhist Tantrism, and to a certain degree the Hindu tradition, offers an interesting exception in a way. The Buddha may not have been counted among the learned of his day, but he was certainly a sophisticated speaker and a good propounder of his own doctrine.

VAYRAYANA

Vajrayana emerged as the third major division of Buddhism in the eighth century AD after Buddhism had already split into the Hinayana and Mahayana forms. This altogether new form of Buddhism developed with much emphasis on rituals, meditational practices, gods and goddesses and included within its fold elements like mantra, mudra, mandala etc. These were probably inclusions in the process of adjustments to the pressures of the environment. This phase of Buddhism is a kind of Buddhist Tantrism and the appellation of Mantrayana or Tantrayana is also given to this school as being based on mantra, tantras etc. Tantric Buddhism is similar to Hindu Tantric Sastra in its form, characteristic, principles, doctrine and paraphernalia. It is important to remember in this connection that Tantrik tradition was not evolved by Hinduism or Buddhism out of its own select material, but has in fact grown out of the soil which both the Hindu and Buddhist use. Tantric literature should be regarded as an independent religious literature consisting essentially of religious methods and practices current in India from ancient times.

The Tantras, Brahmanic or Buddhist, represent a special aspect of social, religious and cultural life of India and it is not possible to trace the origin of any of these groups to any system or systems of philosophy. It is also a historical fact that some tantric trends were particularly in India's extreme boundaries and other outside Indian territory. The supreme ideal of Tantric worship and practice is the identifying of the individual with the supreme. This characteristic of Tantra holds good for both the Hindu and Buddhist tantra. Both forms enunciate a theological principle of duality in non-duality and hold that the ultimate non-duality possesses two aspects in its fundamental nature: the negative and the positive, nirvâna (cessation) and pravṛtti (origin). These two forces are represented as Siva and Sakti in Brahmanism and Prajna and Upaya in Buddhism. In the case of Brahmanism, the metaphysical principles of Siva and Sakti are manifested in the material world as the male and the female, and Buddhism, too, has the same interpretation for the manifestations of Prajna and Upaya. The ultimate goal of both is the state of perfect union of the two and the realization of the non-dual nature of self and nonself.

With the present level of knowledge on the subject, it is difficult to either trace any organic relation between Buddhism and Tantrism or to ascertain exactly when these esoteric elements were introduced into Buddhism. It is, however, an interesting study to try and find out how the teachings of Sakyamuni could incorporate so many heteroegeneous and sometimes even revolting ideas within its fold. On the basis of a statement in the Tathagatagupta, it has been said that the Teacher made provision for these practices to help the disciples of lower calibre who would not be able to understand his noble and subtle teachings. This seems to contradict the life and teachings of the master who has always been represented as an uncompromising critic of the Brahmanic system of rituals and ceremonies. No testimony from any source can convince one that the Buddha whose entire life was dedicated to stem the tide of the evils generated by the prevalent religious systems, should have himself advocated for these elements only to attract a larger number of people to his fold.

Traditionally, Asanga, the exponent of the Yogacara philosophy has been credited with introduction of esoteric principles to Buddhism and some sources name Nagajuna, the propounder of the Madhyamika philosophy, as the founder of the Buddhist esoteric school. It has been said that the Buddhist Dharmas are the first codification of the ideas underlying the Tantra and that they form the 'first kernel from which the tantras developed'. The Dharmas have been thought to as old as the Mahasanghikas and in this context the origin of Buddhist Tantras may be traced to the beginning of the Christian era.

Whatever be the time and the reason for the introduction of esoteric elements and whoever be the person responsible for this, it seems reasonably certain that the Mahayana pledge for universal redemption had to make way for the current popular religious practices in Buddhism to make it generally acceptable. Buddhist principle and traditions tinged with these materials helped the growth of Tantrik Buddhism or Vajrayana. As a corporate system, Vajrayana has incorporated a large number of popular beliefs and practices which have played a significant role in the development of Buddhism in its later phase. With continuous flow of these elements into the body of Buddhism, the Teacher, who was so much against anything connected with deities and divinity, himself became edified and considered a Lokottara or superhuman. The Buddhist master with their broad-minded receptiveness, strengthened by the tendency of spreading over the backward frontier people, did not hesitate to accept their ideas and even deities into their fold after the elements were fully transformed and ‘purged of their primitive crudeness’. This formed an essential feature of later Buddhism. Many mandalas of Vajrayana reveal contact of Buddhism with the frontier people. For example, Goddess Ekajata, later considered to be an aport of Tara, is said to have been introduced by Nagajuna with her linga taken from the Bhotia country.

Vajrayana as a later development of Buddhism has included many heterogeneous elements from the abhara (spells employed for evil purposes) to the elaborate ritualistic worship of deities, compassionate attitude for the well being of all sentient beings, subtle meditational practices and so on and so forth. These inclusion also make a precise and comprehensive definition of Vajrayana impossible. The incorporation of a large number of Hindu deities along with the elements of mantra, dharna, japa, tapa and other similar concepts have changed the complexion of the Buddha’s religion beyond recognition, providing some scholars to brand this phase of Buddhism as Hinduism of Buddhism or Hinduism in the garth of Buddhism.
This criticism of Tantric Buddhism does not, however, appear to be justified since this phase of Buddhism has not lost the essence of Buddhism despite the strong interulsion of Brahmanic ideas and beliefs. Though Manjuri-mili-kapasa describes a number of Gods and Goddesses, Buddhism did not have, till the second century AD, any conception of a well-classified pantheon and it was only with the emergence of the Tantric phase that Buddhist deities multiplied. In the Vajrayana pantheon, Vajrasattva is the ‘Adi-Buddha’ - the primal enlightened one, the primordial God. Later Buddhist texts describe the Adi Buddha variably as Swamambhu, Dharmanarayu, formless, and as the nature and form of the void and so on. The concept of a supreme Lord, developed itself into the idea of Adi Buddha, who is even held as the originator of Dhyani Buddha. Though there is much uncertainty about the time and place of origin of the theory of Adi Buddha, the idea of Adi Buddha as the supreme Lord finds a prominent place in the Swamambhu Purana and enjoys an important position in Nepalese Buddhism. As the highest deity in Vajrayana, the lord has been attributed with five kinds of knowledge which are to be taken as the five kinds and creative potencies in the ultimate nature of the Lord, that is pure consciousness.
These attributes of the Lord produce five kinds of dhyana (meditation) and the five Dhyani Buddhas who occupied so important a place in later Buddhism as having emanated from these five kinds of dhyana. The five Dhyani Buddhas represent and the five primordial cosmic forces responsibile for creation and are considered the presiding deities over the five skandhas or material elements the world is composed of. Described as the propogation of five bases or families which help the fulfillment of all desires and attainment of emancipation, the deities are represented with a colour, a crest, a particular mudra (symbol), a mount (vahana), a particular Bodhasattva, a human Buddha, a bija mantra (mythic syllable), a particular kula and are associated with the five elements, the five sense organs and perceptions.
In the process Buddhists have introduced numerous gods and goddesses and it is perhaps in the text of the Cuhuvasana that we get a proper description of the Vajrayanic pantheon for the first time. The different branches or sects of Vajrayana accepted the ideas and institutions current among the masses and with their spiritual universalism, incorporated popular indigenous derives in their mandalas (magic circles) as aspects of their chief Gods. As a result of this tendency, popular Hindu deities like Indra, Varuna, Mahavesara, Kuvera, Skanda, Vama and even Kama, the God of Love, have all been admitted into Buddhism and find places in the magic circles as keepers of quarazines. With the divergence of Buddhism into this direction, a large number of deities and Buddhist beings, often in female form and sometimes with monstrous appearances, also found place in Vajrayanic texts. In almost all texts of later Buddhism, we find references to such beings as Chunda, Amba, Dakini, Yogini, Yaksini and a host of others like them. The incorporation of Hindu gods and goddesses into Buddhism reached its maximum limit with the development of the Kalacakraka system which appears to be the latest phase of Buddhist or for that matter Vajrayana. Though Buddhist tantra have been divided into three schools - Vajrayana, Shinayana and Kalacakraka - there is no source available to clarify this division. In its essence, form and character, the Kalacakraka system is a developed form of Vajrayana and so is the Sahayata cult of Sahayana. Both, Tibetan and Indian sources agree that the Kalacakraka system was introduced to India from a country named Sambhala about sixty years before it went to Tibet. It is generally accepted that the system reached Tibet through Kashmer in 1026 AD. The Jainist religion is fully covered by the ideas and thoughts of this system and a large number of treatises have been written by Tibetan scholars on the subject.
32

The Vimalakirtinjaya locates Sambhala in the north of river Sita and the Aryavisaya, the land of the Aryas, India, is described as situated to the south of the river and in between the Himavat and the island of Lanka. Croma de khot places the land between 45 degrees and 50 degree north latitude beyond river Sita which he identifies as Jaran. Description of the way leading to the mysterious land of Sambhala as found in the Tibetan sources, however, suggests Jaran is in East Turkestan to Sita of the Kalacakra fame. The Sanskrit text and various Tibetan commentaries of the Kalacakra school help us understand the real nature and characteristic of the system which, true to the principles of Jina and Vajrayana, attempts to explain the whole creation within this body. An elaborate system of yoga practice with the control of the vital winds in the body has been regarded as a very important and fundamental factor in realizing the truth in the form of the Lord Kalacakra. A Kalacakrayanist wants to keep himself above the influence of the cycle of time which is ever moving to cause decay, death and rebirth. The flow of time is nothing but the working of vital winds in the body. It is the action of these winds that time reveals itself and if a Sadhaka can control and stop this action, he can stop the flow of time and can thereby raise himself up to the state of Mahasukha, removing suffering, death and rebirth.

Kalacakra, the highest God in this system, is essentially of the same nature as that of the concept of Vajraavarta found in different Vajrayana texts. He is the unity of Prajna and Upaya, the Bodhicitta, the ultimate immutable one in the form of the incorruptible great Bliss - Mahasukha. He is without origins and without destruction, the unitary embodiment of knowledge and knowable embraced by Prajna, Transcendent wisdom, both endowed with highest forms content. He is the creator of all Buddhas and the Adi Buddha. As the cause of absolute unification of Sunyata and Karuna, Kalacakra is the one Lord to be realised by all Buddhists to free themselves from the bondage of repeated existences (Samsara). The importance of this concept, once exercised among the Buddhists, may be evident from the famous stanzas repeated by Padma Karpo to have been inscribed by Tsi Lu Pa on the upper side of the main entrance to the Nalanda monastery. He, who does not know the Adi Buddha, does not know the Kalacakra. He who does not know the Kalacakra, does not know how to utter the mystic syllables properly.

The Buddha supposed to have preached the doctrine himself on the famous Grandharakuta mountain in Rajghra after his proclamation of Mahayana Prajna Paramitaya. He proclaimed the kalacakra teachings again at Dhyanakuta which, with the famous Anuruddha stupā and the sacred Sri-Dharma, must have played an important and significant role in the propagation and development of Vajrayana in general and Buddhist Tantricism in particular.

Some Tibetan sources hold that the Buddha revealed the Mula Tantra of the Kalacakra in the year of enlightenment while others hold that the basic text was preached by the master in his eighteenth year of enlightenment. It is said that while the master was exposing the esoteric teachings in the assembly of Gods, Bodhisattvas and others, King Sucandra of Sambhata was also present in a mysterious way and prayed to the Buddha for the text of the teachings. A year later, the Mahakaruna with 12,000 verses was recorded and preserved in Sambhata. In course of his treatments of the lost portions of the Buddhist canon, Bu-Sen notes that the Mula Tantra in his history of Buddhism, and having 12,000 verses. The extant Laghu text on the Tantra, however, has only 1047 verses in Sring-tharpa watre. We cannot say with certainty as to who first made the system known to India. Tsi Lu Pa, Pitopa and the older kalacakrala pats are generally regarded in different sources as the first Indian scholars of the system. Pitopa was a pupil of Atisa or of Naropa, according to Taranatha, and so cannot be held as the first Indian scholar to master the new teachings. If we believe the report that a new name was adopted by a sadhaka after every new initiation, then Tsi Lu Pa and the older kalacakrala pats could be the one and the same person. Padma Karpo gives an account of Tsi Lu Pa birth and also how he had acquaintance with the knowledge of the Tantras and the sciences of kalacakra through the grace of a Bhiksu who later instructed him to go to East India and spread the new system. He visited Nalanda and defeated the Asaya Narmpa in debate there. Naropa studied the new teachings of the Kalacakra under the victorious Tsi Lu Pa and later became a prominent interpreter of the school himself. Tani Lo Ra is said to have established a line of teachers includ- ing the tradition of Kajavakas. A more important school of teachers was started by Nyang Sonamtha, a disciple of Naopa. The tradition of Sonamtha and his followers is known as the school of Rva as it was estab- lished by Chosob of Rva.

Hence, with the Kajavaka tantra as the most important factor in their philosophy, the Buddhists have attached greatest importance to astronomi- cal speculations and to the movement and position of the sun, the planets, the constellations etc. As experts in astrology and astronomy, they interpret the principles and fundamentals of Buddhism in relation with time and its different units.

TANTRAYANA, By H. H. The Fourteenth Dalai Lama

The paths I have mentioned are doctrinal paths and they must be fol- lowed to provide a sound foundation before Tantrayana (the way of yogic method) is practised. In Tibet, the greatest care was taken before any Tantric doctrine was introduced. Spiritual teachers always investigated whether the doctrine was among those posited by Lord Buddha and excelled it to logical analysis by competent pandits and so tested its effects in the light of experience before they confirmed its authenticity and adopted it. This was necessary as there were many non-Buddhist Tantric doctrines which were apt to be confused with those of Buddhism because of superficial resem- blance. The Tantrayana falls into four classes and it has a vast number of creations which cannot be enumerated here. In the simplest terms it can be described thus: bad karma are held responsible for the various miseries we suffer. The bad karmas are created through delusion. Delusion is essentially due to an uncontrolled mind. The mind should therefore be disciplined and controlled by exercises that stop the flow of evil thoughts. This flow may be stopped as wandering or projecting mind is brought to rest by concentration or the physical make up of one's body and the psychological make up of one's mind. The mind may also focus on the external objects of contemplation. For this, strong contemplative powers are needed and the figures of deities are found to be suitable objects for this contemplation. For this reason, there are many images of deities in Tantrayana (Vajrayana). These are not arbitrary creations, images, as objects of contemplations to purify the body, mind and senses have been created with a true intention as well as practical aspects and sometimes with multiple heads and hands so that they suit the physical, mental and mantric attitudes of different individuals striving for the final goal.

Progress towards this goal is achieved in some cases mainly through strong
BEGINNINGLESS AND THE ENDLESS TANTRA

Initiation of Tantrik Dharmacakra tradition cannot be explained by the historical chronology of modern concept. Tantra has been delivered mostly by spiritual planes of Devakota and Dakshintha (unabridged). It also manifests in Jambu Dwipa as various Vedic Devas (fabled deities). The enlightened masters of India and Tibet mostly acknowledged this fact. Even those who have a grip over this kind of meditation and contemplation, and have attained ordinary and extraordinary siddhas, admit the same. Therefore, this mystic fact cannot be disobeyed by little knowledge, intellectual imagination and futile arguments. This kind (Tantra) of mystic sayings are found not only in Tantra but also in Paramita Naya kind of texts. Not only in Paramita Naya, but also in Shra-sa's Vidyutmra (Dharmikamr in Pali), many of the esoteric and esoteric demonstrations by Buddhhas are noted. In brief, it may be said that Yoga Suthas of Yogic Buddhhas must be unfolding newer Tantric Dhahana (revelations, deliverances). As such, it is not possible to make any historical chronicle of Tantra, neither for analysis nor for practices, because even today, those who are meant to be carriers of Kriyamatra may get direct communications from Buddhhas and Bodhchintavas and do the needful. Admissibility of the outlook of today's theorists to conceptualize any orderly chronology of mantra, Sharana, Deva Upasana, kriya, chanya, yoga or anuttarayoga and siddhas sambhava (tracing) as unfolding of the Sahaja vision, is reducible.

Briefly, Tantra is not bound by a beginning or an end. In field is vast, self-expanding and serious in understanding. In Karanduk Vyoha, hath, Tantra and Mantra are available. In this way, the same text observes Asti Buddha, Sthatha Buddha and Mantra-Tatra correlated Bauddha Dharma and Bhashi Magha.

1. Dr. P.C. Bagchi, Studies in the Tantra.
2. Tantra Sramraka, n. 3487
3. B. Bhartasbrata, Buddhist Esoterism, 1&FF
7. Jagadguru, Dr. B. M. Baviuh Birth Centenary Commemoration Volume, Allahabad.
8. TantrAs, An General Study, Maranjan Bha.
11. The DHAMMAPADA, Commentary Union Buddha Sasana Council, The Department of Pali, University of Rangoon, Burma.
13. Buddhism Among the Monpas and Sherdulpas, by Niranjan Sarkar.
17. Srimad Bhagavata
18. Laitavitara xii, ch. v. S. XIII
23. A History of Pre-Buddhistic Indian Philosophy, by B. M. Barua, pp. 196, 197, 337.
27. Aspects of Indian History and Civilization, by Buddhika Prakash.
28. Aspects of Indian Thought, by M. M. Goswamath Kaviraj.
29. Tantric Studies on Their Religion and Literature, by Chiruvaharan Chakravorty.
30. Sekolah Lima of Nalakada, by Marie Clay, Dr. Lim.
31. A Rare Buddhist Text Project (Tantra), Vol. 1,2,3,4,5,6,7, Central Institute of Higher Tibetan Studies, Sarnath, Varanasi 1988.
32. The Life of Buddha, by Edward J. Thomas.
33. The History of Buddhist Thought, by Edward J. Thomas 37
34. An introduction to Buddhism, by H.H. The Fourteenth Dalai Lama

TANTRICISM IN THE VEDAS

35. Rig Veda, I.V.154, 2, VII. 59,12,1.22,20,1.22,21, IV. 40.5, X.184.1, X.184.2.

36. The use of Protective amulets also seems to have been quite popular at the time of the Atharvaveda (AV. ii.ii.III.VIII.5 X.6, Kausika abicara, urkarma, Sammana sya. pustika and other soecery rites of which we get references in the Atharvaveda are quite common in the Tantras).

38. Suta Patha Brahm - 1.11.18, 26.21 etc.

39. The Path of Purification (Vinuddhamaggas), Vol. 1.2.3, Buddha ghausariyaa, Ven.herable Dr. Rewata Dhamma.

41. Ogha Nikaya, Vol. 3. 9th Sutta p. 150 (Parthikavaggas).

42. The Sripatthana Sutta, V.F. Guarama, Buddhist Publication Society, 1976, Ceylon.

38