MEA CULPA
Is Hari Prasad Pandey just too honest for Nepal?

KEDAR SHARMA in POKHARA

Is Hari Prasad Pandey coming under the spotlight for the first time in his life? The former UML minister and one-time interim prime minister has found himself in the media spotlight once again, this time over a confession that he has been whitewashing his past. The former minister and one of the architects of the verification agreement for refugees last year, and opposition leader Madhav Kumar Nepal of the UML.

On the first day of his press conference in Kathmandu Wednesday, he had boasted about the success of the verification process, saying that only 12,000 Bhutanese refugees had been verified. However, on the second day of his press conference, he admitted that the verification process had been botched up and that there were still many Bhutanese refugees living in camps in eastern Nepal. The disputes over the verification process have plagued the government for years.

The king's reply: "Sometimes you have to." Bastola said the king appeared pleased that such a dramatic confession would hit the headlines the next day. And so Pandey became the butt of jokes, the subject of cartoons, and derisive public reaction came thick and fast. Some said the UML in opposition had "gone off its rocker." Others thought it was more of a public relations stunt. "Some even contended that a religious fanatic had bitten. Therefore we met him in Bhakha, said simple man who friends call a "Gandhian communist.

Red carpets in Thimpu

Is a fresh bid to resolve a continued deadlock over the future of the 100,000 Bhutanese refugees in camps in eastern Nepal, Thimpu is on a charm offensive targeted at Nepali politicians. The Bhutanese leadership probably knows that both Bastola and Nepal are prime ministers-in-waiting, and they want to cover both bases," explained one senior Nepali official, who asked not to be named.

Yes, it was my first real opportunity to meet the Bhutanese line-up, Bastola said. On our side we're ready to meet given a week's notice. We are ready," Foreign Ministry spokesman Gyan Chandra Acharya told us. The ready, he said, also included a war of words with the Bhutanese. We are not going to give in to any pressure from Bhutan," Bastola said.

"The Bhutanese leadership probably reckons that the Nepali officials have been trying to fix a date for the next round of ministerial talks to decide on repatriating those who have been verified. But Bhutan is sticking to its four-group verification in the Khudunabari camp last year.

Bhutanese refugees lining up for lunch packs during infrastructure help or harm the Maoist cause?

Q. Will the bombings and attacks of development projects on Maoist infrastructure help or harm the Maoist cause?

For Bhutanese human rights activist Ratan Gazmere, the Bhutan government is not working properly because the media is not functioning as it should. But that is no reason to put away the messenger. We are witnessing the political evolution of a nation, and if the media that has, in large part, helped shape that process, is the mirror. Democracy and free expression are the backbone of a healthy society. You can't have one by undermining the other.

It was inevitably that such dramatic confusion would hit the headlines the next day. And so Pandey became the butt of jokes, the subject of cartoons, and derisive public reaction came thick and fast. Some said the UML in opposition had "gone off its rocker." Others thought it was more of a public relations stunt. "Some even contended that a religious fanatic had bitten. Therefore we met him in Bhakha, said simple man who friends call a "Gandhian communist."

Pandey has even done the legal homework for the government, and assigned himself a fine of Rs 15 million, which he said he had already set aside to be handed over if the government should decide he would be held guilty.

The buzzword "harmonisation". Nepal maintains that there are only two categories of refugees: Bhutanese or non-Bhutanese.

The Bhutanese leadership probably knows that both Bastola and Nepal are prime ministers-in-waiting, and they want to cover both bases," explained one senior Nepali official, who asked not to be named.

PRESS FREEDOM DAY

Today, 3 May, is World Press Freedom Day. Democracy and a free press are two sides of the same coin, and if Nepal is to move forward, if the country is to be a democracy, the role of the media cannot be underestimated. Freedom to report without fear or favour is a basic human right, and one that we in Nepal have been struggling to uphold for years.

Himal Chandra Mishra is a member of the Nepalese Communist Party. He currently serves as the deputy prime minister of the Nepal Communist Party. He has been a member of the Nepalese Communist Party since 1973 and has held various positions within the party, including the secretary of the Central Committee, the general secretary of the party's Central Secretariat, and the general secretary of the party's Central Committee. He is also a member of the party's Central Leadership Council.

The Nepal Communist Party is a political party in Nepal that was formed in 2002 through the merger of the Nepali Congress and the Communist Party of Nepal (Maoist). The party has been in power since 2015 and is currently led by Pushpa Kamal Dahal and Prachanda. The party's policies include socialism, nationalization of banks and land reform.
This is a “peoples’ war” in which ordinary people like Purna Bahadur Khatri, Amrit Bahadur BK, Tilak Nepali and Prakash Jwala are fighting against the Maoists. They are not being supported by the government or the international community. They are fighting for their right to live in peace and safety. The Maoists have already destroyed the villages of Thabang, Jongkot, and Rolpa, and are now threatening the villages of Thabang, Jongkot, and Rolpa.

Nepal’s food crisis

Nepal is facing a severe food crisis due to the ongoing conflict. The conflict has disrupted the supply of food from the mountains to the plains, and has also destroyed the agricultural infrastructure. The food crisis is particularly acute in the Kamalpani area, where the Maoists have control. The government has not taken any effective steps to address the food crisis, and people are struggling to survive.

Women and children

Women and children are especially vulnerable to the food crisis. Many women have been forced to sell their children for food, and thousands of children have been orphaned due to the conflict. The government has not taken any steps to address the needs of women and children.

German Technical Cooperation

The government has invited German Technical Cooperation to help address the food crisis. However, the government has not provided the necessary financial support to the cooperation.

Global Kaliyug

As you can see, the situation in Nepal is very serious. The government is not doing anything to address the crisis, and people are suffering. We need to act now to prevent a full-scale humanitarian crisis.

In a picture-perfect day, the embers to the north were strong. The heat of the sun evaporated into thin air. The Chandra's father had just died a few weeks ago. He was a good man, a kind man. He always had time for others, even when he was busy with his own affairs.

This was a day to remember. The Chandra family was gathered around the small shrine in their village. The men were dressed in their best clothes, the women in their traditional saris. The children played with their toys, unaware of the drama that was unfolding around them.

The funeral pyre was burning brightly, casting a flicker of light on the faces of the mourners. The village was in a somber mood, as they bid farewell to their beloved Chandra. The day was filled with tears, as the family mourned the loss of their patriarch.

But amidst the sadness, there was a sense of hope. The Chandra family was strong, and they would weather this storm together. They would carry on, just as their ancestor had taught them to do.

The day ended with a prayer, as the family gathered around the shrine. They knew that Chandra was in the heavens, watching over them, and guiding them on their journey.

The Chandra family was a true example of how to live a life of dignity and grace.

From time to time, we go abroad and meet our clients directly and brief them on the current situation. That helps lessen their fears. We tell them about the business situation, the security situation, and the overall economy.

NT: How has business been since the emergency?

It has been hard for us, but we have managed to keep our business going. We have had to make some tough decisions, but we have managed to keep our staff employed and our business running.

Chandra was a key figure in our company, and his passing has been a huge loss for us. We have had to adjust to the new reality, and we have had to make some difficult decisions.

But we are hopeful for the future. We believe that things will improve, and we are making plans for the future.

Chandra's story

There were many thousands of people in Nėpāl in those days, and there was great hope and excitement among them. They believed that their country was on the verge of a new era, a time of transformation and change.

But after Chandra's death, the hope diminished. The people were left with only memories of their lost hero. They knew that he would be missed, but they also knew that they had to move on and continue their journey.

Chandra's spirit lived on, and his legacy inspired others to follow in his footsteps. The people of Nėpāl knew that they had to be strong, and they were determined to continue building their country.

Kathmandu Valley’s famous pottery has to change with the times.

ALEXANDRA ALTER

It used to be that a potter would make a total of 100 pots a day. Today, Nepal’s most renowned potters only produce 10 of them. After all, business is changing. Crab-shaped, or earthworm-shaped pieces that are painstakingly, often painstakingly hand-rolled, take up to 15 days to complete.

The days when potters in Thimi worked almost exclusively in a communal workshop have ended. Today, they work in their own homes or workshops. While this change has undoubtedly brought about a loss of contact with other potters and a community sense of purpose, it has also allowed them to become more independent. And as they become more independent, they are also facing greater competition.

In the past, potters in Thimi produced pottery for their own needs, and often for the needs of their families. Today, they must sell their work to survive. This has had a significant impact on the way they make pottery. They must now think about how their work will be sold, and how it will be perceived by potential buyers. They must also think about how their work can be made more efficiently, in order to compete with other potters.

In the past, potters in Thimi would spend days working on a single piece of pottery. Today, they must produce large quantities in order to make a profit. This has led to a decrease in the quality of their work, as they are forced to cut corners in order to produce more.

In the past, potters in Thimi would use traditional methods to make their pottery. Today, they must use new, more efficient methods in order to survive. This has led to a loss of traditional knowledge, as younger potters are not being taught these skills.

In the past, potters in Thimi would sell their pottery directly to customers. Today, they must sell their work through中间...
