The government must urgently improve governance

Attention to governance has never been more important. Why? First, the Maoists appear to have decided that this is the time to go for what they call the 'final blow'. Second, the elections are now closer, and the security forces are now banking on making the powers-that-be in Kathmandu sit up and take notice. Third, there is a need to carry out something spectacular near Kathmandu to avenge the massive defeat in Khara in which the army says at least 200 guerrillas were killed. Those three things are needed not only because a Maoist victory would mean an end to the present political instability, but also because it would make the powers-that-be in Kathmandu sit up and take notice. The Maoists need a big push at this time to make the powers-that-be in Kathmandu sit up and take notice. The Maoists and their Nepali proteges have memorised that line. It is conceivable that the Maoists will use this line to make the powers-that-be in Kathmandu sit up and take notice.

There is an ominous calm. Is a storm near?

The Maoists have benefited greatly from the political instability in Kathmandu. And they seem to be using the time to re-strategise while waiting for the Congress internal crisis to play itself out, and perhaps payback for what Baburam Bhattarai calls their 'decisive offensives'.

'When we came to the throne, we had an unexpected and extraordinary situation. I don’t think we ever imagined the magnitude of the challenge we faced and the awesome support from the people. That was most important.'

Nepalis, I have been told, are not always the best at democracy. Fortunate or not, their security forces are not playing the role they should be. And if that happens, they cannot bring peace and security to the citizens.

’What ways are you using to electorally negotiate?’ ‘Is the government, political parties, different stream of society, how to see it as a positive thing, and peace for the election?’

The constitutional institutions of the new government need the support and respect of the Nepali people.

’There is no coalition, development should not blame the system. Our sharing of power today is caught in a spiral of violence. If all these are something that is going on, then the only solution can emerge from an approach consistent with the constitution.

’I want to tell the Nepali people, live as Nepalis, be proud of it. Let us learn to work for our nation and for its great. This nation will ask you to sacrifice, you have to step forward and only by sharing.

More problems

The government told donors Thursday that it had made an “extraordinary effort” plan to get the returnees to return. The plan is to give them financial assistance to return home, and to use the time to re-strategise while waiting for the Congress’s internal crisis to play itself out, and perhaps payback for what Baburam Bhattarai calls their ‘decisive offensives’.

It is important to note that the situation in South Asia today is far different from the Cold War period. The alternative, humiliating peace talks,
except for a few highly trained nukearsenal specialists, are now largely easily understood as illegal and unacceptable by the international com-societal support network. Just looking at the eight-page letter, I tried to imagine what would have been taken out. Kidneys do not “growback”, and even though a person must be able to function with only one kidney, the other kidney takes over the functions of the missing one, when necessary.

But there were no new kidney plants in the country. In fact, the number of kidney transplants per year
in Nepal has dropped from 1,000
patients to just 200.

That is why the Institute of Medical Science (IMS) in Kathmandu
is actively involved in helping others like Dhana and Jeet. The institute is also known for its work in organ
transplantation.

Dr Shah says he is so frustrated with the medical staff there refused to allow him to talk to the patient. A transplant operation would have been a near.

Jeet soon realised that this is one of the worst diseases a poor person can have in Nepal. To live with a drug problem and an ageing aunt. He managed to finish
his BSc from the Nepal Science Centre and then went on to work in the medical field.

Dr Shah says that mistakes can sometimes happen but also tells us about the treatment the patient needs, and the errors doctors make. The hospital administration could not pay the customs duty due on the medical staff there refused to allow him to talk to the patient. A transplant

Hang economics

Stop thinking about the economy. Watch football instead.

The Nepal Football Federation presents a bumper offer to football fans: a chance to win a trip to the World Cup in South Africa. "We want to engage the public in football," says President Niranjan Thapa. "We want to make this a fun event for them."

To participate, fans need to purchase a体育彩票 (lottery ticket) for N.100 (about US$1). The lucky winner will receive a trip to South Africa, including flights, accommodation, and entry to all the matches. The Afghanistan team has also offered to pay for the winner's travel insurance.

In the past, football has been a popular sport in Nepal, with many fans following the national team. However, the country has faced financial difficulties in recent years, and the Nepal Football Federation has been struggling to finance its operations. The lottery is a creative way to generate revenue and support the sport.

The event will take place on 15th June, and tickets are already on sale. So, mark your calendars and get ready for a thrilling football adventure in South Africa! Good luck to all the participants!

Man of the match

In the studio now I have Bhaichung Bhutia, and we are watching the Brazil vs Turkey match. Tell me, Bhaichung, are you prepared by Rivaldo or what?

Bhaichung: "Well, Gary, to be honest, I couldn’t agree less."

Thank you Bhaichung. Now, back to Turkey. Run, Rivaldo, run, Rivaldo, run! Can Rivaldo keep his eyes on the ball? Can Rivaldo run? Can Rivaldo score? Can Rivaldo do anything?

Bhaichung: "Well, Gary, to be honest, I couldn’t agree less."

Thank you Bhaichung. Now, back to Ibaraki. Run, Rivaldo, run. Can Rivaldo run? Yes, Rivaldo can run. Can Rivaldo act? Yes, Rivaldo can act. Act, Rivaldo act. Now, see Rivaldo collapsed at the corner flag, clutching his face and rolling in agony after Hakan Unsal kicked the ball into his leg. See Korean referee Kim Young-Joo give Unsal the red card. Rivaldo doesn’t deserve to be banned from the World Cup for the next five games, he deserves an Oscar for Best Actor in a Leading Role.

With all these celebrities running around all over our TV screens for a month trying to pretend that they are mortally injured, it’s sometimes difficult to tell the difference between the Football World Cup and the annual Oscars. But with all the world watching, everyone must entertain, and this means improving the game. UNICEF’s soccer for schools programme is doing just that. It’s making football less boring. This year, for instance, the World Cup came with a new twist: the goals were being watched by an Indian Premier League exchange and by children in the first area to receive enlightenment on the game. We must harness the energy of the fans to make football more exciting.

FIFA’s Governing Body, being a democracy, is also distracted by its own politicking, threats of a split within the ruling politburo, allegations of corruption, vote-buying and rumors of a coup. This is a democracy, but with the power in the hands of the politicians, they are not interested in promoting the game. FIFA must rise above these petty governance issues and take immediate steps to ensure that there are more goals. In this day and age how can you sustain viewer interest with a game in which, on average, there is only one goal per match? (Except if the Saudis are playing.)

Here are some ways to get more goals into a game:

1. Double the width of the goalposts.
2. Eliminate goal-keepers.
3. Allow offsides.
4. Increase the number of players on each side from 11 to 56.
5. Reduce the ball size to that of a tennis ball.

In this manner, football will be much more exciting, and it would not be inconceivable to have a Brazil-China match with a score of 43-21. More goals also means more time to have commercial breaks, which means there will be enough sponsors to have the World Cup every year instead of every four years.

The other thing that slows football down is the rule that you can only hit the ball with your foot or your head. Look at the Americans, they took a boring game, changed the shape of the ball (which made it more difficult to throw) and then allowed hand-to-hand combat, which is fine if you’re trying to earn a living. But football is a sport, and it should be played with sportsmanship. Soccer, in comparison, is a sissy and awkward game because players are banned from using their hands. FIFA has made a start by considering legalising hooliganism inside the D-area, but this is only a small first step. The next big step is to have a tournament with mixed teams with men and women, and allow everything in the field except kicking. Yes, Bhaichung, you wanted to say something?

Bhaichung: "I want to know why I have to wear this suit. Not only is it tight around the armpits, but I look like a total dork."
