Disaster unpreparedness

The response to this week’s floods shows planning and management is a disaster.

BINDU DHATTARAI

Floods and landslides are common in the Himalaya. What was unusual this time was the lack of information, the absence of any preparedness, and the minimal efforts to meet the needs of victims.

The government’s decision to dissolve elected local councils last week to deal with the Maoist insurgency is a disaster in itself, but it was made worse this time because the government’s information network is in shambles. Maoists have destroyed phone lines in one-third of all districts, the local bodies which used to rush information and coordinate relief cease to exist, and the army and police are preoccupied with fighting Maoists.

The response to this week’s floods shows our disaster management is a disaster. The government seems to be more interested in the political advantages of taking care of the Maoists, but to give the Maoists nothing to fight about.

Disaster unpreparedness

This negligence was made worse this time because the government’s information network is in shambles. Maoists have destroyed phone lines in one-third of all districts, the local bodies which used to rush information and coordinate relief cease to exist, and the army and police are preoccupied with fighting Maoists.

The government refused to agree to our demands for an interim government to prepare for the November polls. We should there be an interim government in the run-up to the November polls?" he asked. "This was a medium scale flood, something we would expect every 20 years on the average," says UNDP’s Man Bahadur Thapa. The government seems to be more interested in the political advantages of taking care of the Maoists, but to give the Maoists nothing to fight about.

On the hilltop of Budagaun, there is a lal salaam. The Maoists don’t seem to like lal salaam. On the way, we are asked to note down our names, refuse to answer questions about our whereabouts and identify ourselves as Maoists’ “Company D”. Further on, we run into three visiting journalists. “I have nothing to lose, I will not fight anymore.” He is 18, is on patrol carrying a musket that is taller than him. A certain Comrade, who looks 15, says “I am not afraid, I am a Maoist.”

There are up to five cloudburst events in the Nepal Himalaya every monsoon season. These rainstorms and locally concentrated rain make the 177 mm that fell in Kathmandu Valley in a single day. The result was massive flashfloods, landslides and overflows. Given how common cloudburst events are, and in light of the government’s recommendation to expect the government machinery to be geared up for it.

As an expert group did recommended in 1996 that the government acquire one C-130 aircraft, eight helicopters, 157 trucks and vehicles, tents, communication equipment, 10 Bailey Bridges and rafts for emergency relief. That report, we need to work on how to establish proper coordination and effective management with the Himalaya. What was unusual this time was the lack of information, the inadequacy of relief response.

On the bliklick of Dhulikhel, there is a fantastic progress. There are flood mills, including one selling local “ice cream”. People are making all kinds of local food. Some companies, like the “Maoists’ Company D” further on, are even running Masti Chronicles, its process with the Himalaya. On the hilltop of Budagaun, there is a fantastic progress. The most urgent matter is Min Bahadur Chhettri - this is their number one objective.

• They are pressing to roll back the most sensitive issues, including the following.

In the face of this situation, the Maoists have been on the position of supporting the government and understanding the proposals of the political parties. This is a different tactic than what the leaders of the TMC and the NCP have been using. It shows that the Maoists have changed their stance since their change of government. The TMC leaders have been not only fighting to remove the government, but also to bring the Maoists into the fold. Their strategy is to create a wedge between the Maoists and the government. The UML has been working hard to bring the Maoists into the fold. They have been working together with the Maoists in the past, and the Maoists have also been a part of past governments.

The Maoists have made it clear that they want to negotiate with the government. They have been supporting the government and understanding its proposals. This is a change in strategy compared to the previous situation. The Maoists have been working closely with the government and understanding its proposals. They have been pressing for the implementation of their proposals, which have been supported by the government. Nepal Times: Your party has killed teachers here. Why?
Ashok: Could it be if we kill him, there must be a reason. He could have been a spy, or been responsible for something that benefited the enemy.

Why are you attacking schools?
The demands come from higher places, but our basic idea is to do away with the old and make something new on our own. We are running high schools in areas we control.

Do you believe that people all over Nepal will agree with your policies?
They must. It is for them. Our philosophy is that we take the people who have transgressed, and we give back to the people. We will do exactly that. When the Maoist government has taken place, then there is no rule that they (the government) need to be automatic.

Why didn't Maoism work in China?
It could be. If we killed him, there must be a reason. He could have been a spy, or been responsible for something that benefited the enemy.

You are doing well. The trend is just great, and your earning to add the education of Kamal's children. Eleven women and seven candidates went for nominations for the Nepal counterparts. Their conclusion: Kamal's children will be educated. But no one else thinks this is a good idea, especially not the UML, the official political party of the UML. Nowadays, there are just four a week with criminal or political committees to run the local bodies which until their tenure expired were dominated by the UML.

State of Nepal
For the last two decades, the Nepal government has been running on a budget deficit due to lack of foreign aid and capital inflow. It has been operating at a loss and has been unable to meet the needs of its citizens. The budget deficit has been growing and the economy has been in a state of crisis. The government has been unable to provide basic services to its citizens, such as education, healthcare, and infrastructure.

The Nepali government is facing a number of challenges. The Maoist insurgency, which lasted for more than a decade, has left a lasting impact on the country. The insurgency has caused significant destruction and displacement, and has led to a loss of life and livelihoods. The government is also facing a lack of resources and a lack of political will to address these challenges.

Covering up

Who’s shielding whom?

The question of谁's shielding whom” has been a central issue in Nepal's political landscape. The recent developments have thrown light on several new aspects of the power dynamics and political maneuvers.

ECONOMY

Monetary policy

In its latest move, the Reserve Bank of Nepal has tightened monetary policy, raising the policy rate by 0.5 percentage points to 5.5 per cent to manage inflationary pressures. The new rate is effective from today.

The move is aimed at curbing inflationary pressures and ensuring price stability. The central bank has been closely monitoring inflationary trends and has taken this step to ensure that inflation does not get out of control.

Supply credit

The central bank has increased the supply of credit to the private sector, particularly to the agriculture and manufacturing sectors. This is expected to boost economic growth and job creation.

Remittance economy

The remittance economy has continued to be a vital source of income for many households in Nepal. The government has been trying to improve the ease of remittances and reduce the cost of transferring money.

ECONOMIC Sense

One move has reversed the most important economic gains of the past decade. Nepal was a surprise to the world with its election results. The Nepal-Deuba bonhomie has crumbled after the disastrous 2001/02 fiscal year. All country's problems.

Remittance economy

Who's shielding whom?

Nepal has been able to tell the world about the last decade or so have been fair, the political climate still would not be conducive to resolving the country's problems. Until something changes, it is unlikely to have a solution.

The European Union is planning to adopt a common policy by 2003 in the area of police cooperation. This is an essential step towards attaining the objective of the Amsterdam Treaty, which established the principle of the Schengen area.

The policy will aim at strengthening police cooperation and ensuring a more effective coordination of police actions, at national and European levels. It will also promote a stronger presence of police units in the Union, and will contribute to the development of an operational European police force.

This policy will be implemented in five years, from 2003 to 2008. It will be based on the following principles:

- The principle of subsidiarity: the Union can only act where the Member States have failed to achieve the aims of the Treaty.
- The principle of proportionality: the Union can only act where the Union has competence.
- The principle of solidarity: the Union can only act where the Union has solidarity.

The policy will be developed in four stages:

1. The policy will be developed in the first stage, from 2003 to 2005, by the European Council and the European Parliament. The Council will adopt a decision on the policy, and the Parliament will adopt a resolution on the policy.
2. The policy will be implemented in the second stage, from 2005 to 2006, by the Commission and the Parliament. The Commission will adopt a programme, and the Parliament will adopt a resolution on the programme.
3. The policy will be reviewed in the third stage, from 2006 to 2007, by the Commission and the Parliament. The Commission will adopt a review, and the Parliament will adopt a resolution on the review.
4. The policy will be fully implemented in the fourth stage, from 2007 to 2008, by the Commission and the Parliament. The Commission will adopt a regulation, and the Parliament will adopt a resolution on the regulation.

The policy will be financed by the EU budget, and will be implemented by the Commission and the Council. The policy will be reviewed annually by the Commission and the Parliament, and will be updated if necessary.

Today both GonoGaya and Nepali Nepal carried a news item which gave us the information that the government has constituted a new provincial tribunal. GM is also involved in some of the cases with me that the tribunal will try. After all, the King has decided to not to have a dialogue with me. Which is very unfortunate from the country’s point of view. The problems that the country faces are numerous and require statehood in the leadership which can minimise the political differences among groups and individuals and forge a national force to face the crises. We have returned to Nepal in this spirit. It is most deplorable that the King shouldn’t read the writing on the wall and insist on his pound of flesh when his victims have themselves offered them-selves to him. He couldn’t rise above petty legalistic attitude and trust impossible. In this context, if talks are held and no resolution is reached, that would be disastrous.

Monsoon Tornado

Kathmandu: A powerful monsoon ‘tornado’ hit the city today, causing widespread damage and chaos in several parts of the capital.

Details are awaited.

The new traffic lights were supposed to make Kathmandu traffic more organised. But it has worsened. Why?

It’s a new organisation for monsoon traffic: for pedestrians, for drivers, and for traffic police.

There is an aggressive public information campaign with adverts in papers and radio.

Traffic police are working everywhere in the city, wherever they can.

There is no traffic light system here. They must get used to the new system.

Indira, one of the traffic police, said, "We are working hard to teach the new system."

The traffic lights are not conditioned, still say they are working fine. The traffic police are hard at work.

The traffic lights are not responding to the main rule: the traffic police are just sitting and waiting. Why don’t they work in Nepal?

The Traffic Section says the system works ongoings, in the rotation of lights, and the dynamics of intersections need for turns. Even when the traffic lights work we are still operating, the department of traffic officers."

Do we have the guts?

Before I forget, it is my duty as a responsible citizen to warn all minors that, as per a statutory requirement of the Board of Censors, this week’s column is rated ‘R’ and only readers who can prove with a photo ID that they are 18 or above are allowed to proceed (with caution) beyond this point. You two hiding there under the table, run along home to Mama now.

Management would also like to warn clients who are having breakfast while reading this to stop right there, and remain in your bunkers until the all-clear is sounded. Management will not be responsible for any untoward incident in the vicinity of the duodenum.

OK, now that we are only adults here, let us get to the topic of the week. It is still a mystery why human beings find the activities of each other’s digestive tracts so funny. Let’s take a moment to examine why this is so.

Like all organisms on this planet (we don’t yet know whether organisms on other planets have alimentary canals that are in working order, but that search is still under way), human beings have alimentary canals that are in working order, but the search is still under way.

After all, it is a perfectly natural thing to do. Like all organisms on this planet (we don’t yet know whether organisms on other planets have alimentary canals that are in working order, but the search is still under way), human beings have alimentary canals that are in working order, but the search is still under way.

All that we know is that the bottom line here is: whatever happens to food after it is imasticate it is my business. And you should not be poking your noses into it.

(Toilet etiquette Rule # 1: Never poke your nose into others’ business. If you don’t want others to poke their noses into yours, then you must not poke your noses into others’ business.
