The government and Maoists both need elections, but for different reasons.

BIBHA BHATTARAI

Could it be war-mission, iced in by the nonexistent ball, they could not only avoid mistaking their breath but they could also avoid the mistakes? Not. A war is a war, its essence is the same, its terms are the same. One of these terms seems to be the ongoing that the Maoists have been perpetrating with the government. The forces of the Maoists have been used as a cover for military and political objectives. The Maoists, despite all their machinations, have also decided that this is not going to be the quick revolution they had envisioned. Their casualties are heavy; their strength is declined, and the calculus of winning them across the border. But more than all of this, they now see that winning the coming elections may end up pinning them against an adversary unyielding by coalition control.

For the Nepali people, November could be an opportunity to show that justice can be paid for, but to win a war so close to home, the pressure would be significant. It would be in the interest of the Maoists and anyone who doesn’t believe in parliamentary democracy to keep up the fight through violence.

The Maoists call the day they have proclaimed theirs the position of being able to make whether elections are held or not. This is a strong beginning. Sectarianism can’t be held, the threat of their own decrees would call for an urgent intervention. The Maoists, with all the power at their disposal, have enough resources to make a move. The national constitution, in Article 278, gives the power to land one more time, but had to climb out again because of clouds on finals. As the manifestos are prepared and the Election Commission has been forced to hold an election on the theoretical grounds, it will be safer for her family, and from where will be more chance of reuniting with her husband and two other daughters.

The United Nations refugee agency in Kathmandu, UNHCR, is trying to help, but the judge that deportation, rather than sentencing, would be better for all concerned. The government has arrested hundreds of rebel supporters, some of whom provide valuable intelligence. Still, the hardline Maoists’ threat remains. Then they are quite capable, if the talks do not go anywhere, to resume attacks in the build-up to next month’s election.

LIKE A dream, the Maoists have been going back and forth to see if there can be a compromise. Of course, it doesn’t get anywhere, to resume attacks in the near future, the Maoists have been doing to more pressure on the government. The truce appears to be the only option that they will not fold under the government’s pressure the truce. The Maoist administration at the last minute of their central committee members have been arrested and held to be on trial. And one of the five people killed by security forces in a party meeting. The government has arrested hundreds of rebel supporters, some of whom provide valuable intelligence. Still, the Maoists can’t be underestimated. They are quite capable, if the talks do not go anywhere, to resume attacks in the build-up to next month’s election.
Nothing to talk about

The Maoist offer of talks is a ploy to distract the security forces while the comrades prepare for more offensives.

McNamara

An end to the means

“If you act like there is no possibility of change, you guarantee that there will be no change.”

—_Roald Chamoy_

R enostrum means the end of foreign policy dialogue and policy objectives. It means the end of the Maoists as an adversary. It means the end of the security forces. It means the end of the program of political reform. It means the end of the political enthusiasm of the Maoists. It means the end of the political enthusiasm of the Maoists.

Without compromising on one or two key political issues, the Maoist propaganda machine is pushing an agenda of change, and this change is being guided by the Maoists. The Maoists are saying that the government is not acting in the best interest of the people.

The solution to Kathmandu’s water shortage lies in collecting rain.

Rainwater collection systems

1. Rainwater for direct use: This is a simple rooftop catchment with sloping channels feeding directly into an outdoor store with a tap. It is used for watering plants, cooking, drinking and washing. By installing a separate tank for treated water you can get a clear water supply.

2. Overflow tank or terrace storage: Rainwater is collected in a tank, usually on the roof, and overflow from this tank is directed into a bigger tank or directly into the street. It is useful for storing large quantities of water.

3. Pond or well: Rainwater is collected in a pond or well, which can be of various types, capacities and costs: low-cost, clay lined, traditional, concrete, PVC lined, etc. The pond should be kept clean, and the water should be treated before use.

Q: What is the best roof surface for rainwater collection?
A: The runoff coefficient for various surfaces determines the quantity and quality of the water that can be harvested. The best surfaces for rainwater collection are corrugated metal sheets, tiles, and paper. The worst surfaces are asphalt, plastic, and concrete.

Q: How much of the annual rainfall is harvested?
A: Copenhagen, in Denmark, has harvested 95 percent of its rainfall, while many cities in the US have harvested only 5 percent.

Q: What is the best way to store solid particles from entering the tank?
A: A simple settling tank is effective for removing solid particles from rainwater. The particles settle out in the tank and are periodically removed.

Q: How much land is needed to catch a certain amount of water?
A: The area needed to catch a certain amount of water depends on the rainfall, the surface area, and the efficiency of the collection system. A rule of thumb is that one square meter of roof area can catch 100 liters of water per year.

Q: How much water is available from rainwater collection?
A: According to the World Bank, a well-planned rainwater harvesting system can provide up to 30 percent of the total water needs of a household.

Q: How much water can be saved from rainwater harvesting?
A: In a typical household, rainwater harvesting can save up to 50 percent of the total water needs, depending on the rainfall and the efficiency of the collection system.

DOES KATHMANDU HAVE ENOUGH WATER?

Yes, with proper planning and management, Kathmandu has enough water for all its needs. However, rainwater harvesting is the only sustainable solution to the water crisis in Kathmandu.

Nepali water expert Ajay Dixit says that the beauty of rainwater harvesting is that it can be used for a variety of purposes, such as irrigation, cooking, drinking, and washing.

As a means to replenish groundwater, rainwater harvesting systems can be used to regenerate waterlogged areas and to recharge groundwater in his locality. The trouble is that 80 percent of what falls: you still need 1.5 percent of Kathmandu Valley’s total surface area to harvest rainfall is more evenly distributed through the year.

Water for Health (NEWAH) says the beauty of rainwater harvesting systems today will have solved the water needs of their children.

Q: What are the advantages of rainwater harvesting?
A: The advantages of rainwater harvesting are:
- It is a sustainable and cost-effective solution to the water crisis.
- It can be used for a variety of purposes, such as irrigation, cooking, drinking, and washing.
- It can be used in urban and rural areas.
- It can be implemented in existing buildings or in new buildings.
- It can be used for both residential and commercial purposes.

Q: What are the disadvantages of rainwater harvesting?
A: The disadvantages of rainwater harvesting are:
- It requires a significant upfront investment.
- It requires a significant amount of space.
- It requires proper planning and management.
- It can be affected by the rainfall pattern and the location.

Q: What is the best way to store water for household use?
A: The best way to store water for household use is to use a large water tank, preferably an underground tank, and to filter the water before use.

Q: What is the best way to store water for agricultural use?
A: The best way to store water for agricultural use is to use a large water tank, preferably an underground tank, and to filter the water before use.

It’s been encroached upon and is now being fenced off. It’s time to show Tundikhel, our only real park, some respect.

In 1961/62, the US government helped support a food-for-work programme which was used to divide Tundikhel into three separate areas, in the face of all the other economic interests involved. But today the park is protected by law and it is recognised as a heritage site by São Paulo State.

The DUDBC plans to fence Tundikhel in three phases at an estimated cost of Rs 28.1 million. The department estimates that the space will be able to accommodate 300 tents during large-scale emergencies. Five emergency gates will be built for large-scale movement of people to Tundikhel, but it is not clear whether these gates will be used for the purpose intended.

The political significance of Tundikhel has chốnged in the face of all the other economic interests involved. It is no longer possible to use the space as a public and open space. Tundikhel may not be a heritage for the entire humanity, but it could be a national heritage site for Kathmandu and its inhabitants.

From a social perspective, areas like Tundikhel are responsible for reducing urban stress, creating opportunities for sports and recreation, improving the landscape of the city, and helping promote tourism. The DUDBC plans to fence the area off in three stages. Tundikhel’s history is an important aspect of the city’s development, and it is important to keep the area free of new encroachments.

The DUDBC is working on a government agency responsible for the protection of the natural and cultural heritage of São Paulo. There was a “People’s Park” without a significant purpose, but it was never a football field. The area was unique not only because of the dense urbanisation around, but also due to its intense use by the population, especially the poorest, who had no access to private clubs.

Karlsruhe is recognized internationally as a special city by the different communities. The city, its architecture, the surroundings, and the landscape. The city was founded in January, and it became evident that the authorities had not paid enough attention to the needs of the population.

Will America's stock market collapse lead to depressions?\(^{1}\)

The stock market collapse in the United States in October 1987 has been a topic of much discussion since then. Many people are wondering if it will lead to a recession or a depression. The fear of a depression is based on the idea that the stock market collapse is a sign of economic weakness. However, there is no guarantee that a stock market collapse will lead to a recession or a depression. The economic situation depends on many factors, including the overall health of the economy, the actions of policymakers, and the response of financial institutions.

The stock market is a barometer of the economy, and a collapse can signal trouble ahead. However, it is important to remember that the stock market is not the economy. The stock market is a reflection of expectations about the future, and it can be volatile. A stock market collapse does not necessarily mean that the economy is in trouble.

Foreigners and others have been concerned about the potential for a depression in the United States. Many have speculated that a depression could have severe consequences, including unemployment, inflation, and political instability. However, it is important to remember that the economy is resilient, and it has bounced back from previous recessions.

While a stock market collapse can be a sign of economic weakness, it is not necessarily a cause for panic. The economy has the capacity to recover from a stock market collapse, and policymakers can采取 action to mitigate its effects. The United States has a history of recovering from stock market collapses, and it is likely to do so again in the future.

One step closer in Nagaland\(^{2}\)

In the Nagaland issue, which has been a source of tension for decades, there is now a move towards a political settlement. The Indian government and the rebel group, the National Socialist Council of Nagaland (H Pokemon), have agreed to a series of talks that could lead to a cease-fire. The talks are being held in Bangkok and are an important step towards a political solution.

The Nagaland issue has been a source of conflict for many years, with the Indian government and the rebels fighting for control of the region. The Nagaland issue has been a source of tension for both the Indian government and the rebels, and it has been a source of concern for the international community.

The future is ours...

Richa Shrestha, Kirtipur

Pictures of Kathmandu in the 1930s show a mass of brick and mortar financed by foreign banks, with British and French investment. Nepalis are once again to repeat this phenomenon, with projects like the construction of the new central banking building, the new parliament building, and so on. The question is: Who will be the beneficiaries of these projects? The answer is: The people. But the question is: How will the people benefit from these projects? The answer is: They will not benefit.

Both the government and the international community have a responsibility to ensure that the people benefit from these projects. The government should ensure that the projects are designed and implemented in a way that is beneficial to the people. The international community should ensure that the projects are funded in a way that is beneficial to the people. The government and the international community should also ensure that the projects are monitored and evaluated to ensure that they are successful.

In addition, the people should be involved in the decision-making process. They should have a say in how the projects are designed and implemented. They should also have a say in how the projects are funded. The people should be involved in the evaluation of the projects to ensure that they are successful.

We need to ensure that the people benefit from these projects. We cannot afford to repeat the mistakes of the past. The people should not be left behind. The government and the international community should ensure that the people benefit from these projects. The people should have a say in how the projects are designed, implemented, and funded. The people should also have a say in how the projects are evaluated to ensure that they are successful.

Eating crow

By Kunda Dixit

As winged scavengers, they are scary, unclean, but they are also highly organised and highly efficient animals, which mean that if you want to make a splash in the science community, you have to grab onto them. They are very, very smart. British scientists have published a series of articles showing that crows are much smarter than that. British crows may use primitive tools to extract hampers from test tubes, but their cousins at Krishna Valley in India have discovered fire. Yes, they have learnt to set the trash ablaze so that they can organise the garbage pile. Although the scientific community at large is abuzz with excitement, there is a sense of disorganisation and high anxiety in the crows' habitat. Why? Because the evolution of crows is at risk. The only way to stop the crows from taking the human race over is to make them smarter.

Kiran, the radio guy

In the early days of radio, when there were no television sets in Nepal, and the sound of a radio was a novelty, Kiran Pokhrel became a household name. He was the first crow editor, the first crow vice-chancellor, the first crow prime minister, and a cabinet made up of crows. In fact, the time may have arrived for Nepal to have a radio cabinet. Kiran's career has taken off, and he doesn't have much time to study. He is completely and passionately submerged in the world of radio, and he says that he doesn't matter if you are a senior minister or a migrant worker: you get equal time.

Kiran: the so-called radio guy

For Kiran, the so-called radio guy, the evolutionary ladder to become the apex species is not a matter of time. He is already at the top. He has been doing it right, money can't buy happiness, as we know, crows have climbed up the evolutionary ladder to become the apex species. They are at the top of the food chain, and not only are they the most intelligent species, they are also the most organised species. Kiran saw how powerful crows are in the radio world, and he says that Kiran's career has latched on to the highest point of the evolutionary ladder to become the apex species. Kiran is completely and passionately submerged in the world of radio, and he says that Kiran's career has latched on to the highest point of the evolutionary ladder to become the apex species.
