Disastrous monsoon

A day after 41 villagers were buried in a landslide in northern Ramechap, a Twin Otter crashed into the Trisuli River near Mugling. It has been a season of disasters, as the country burdened from one accident to the next. Landslides and flash floods have caused the loss of many lives and dozens of villages, helping the evacuation of more than 300,000 people in the past month.

Now that the monsoon has ended, you may wonder whether the energy crisis has ended too. In fact, the energy crisis is far from over. The problem is that Nepal has been importing more fuel than it needs, which has resulted in a trade deficit.

But what if economic logic is not the only factor at work? Back in the 1990s, there were private sector initiatives that could have resolved the energy crisis. But officialdom has not lost hope. At the National Planning Commission, Minendra Rijal says it is an issue of demand and supply, which may help overcome political and bureaucratic hurdles.

Northern India is starved for energy. Nepal now has surplus supply. And yet the two can't agree. Why not?

In the Kingdom of Anaemia

Two in three Nepali women are anaemic. That means very unhealthy children, and little GDP.

HELENA RAY

According to the World Health Organisation, 60 per cent of all women and 30 per cent of all children are anaemic. This number goes up among pregnant women and their children. And anaemic in Nepal is not only about women, but also about men. If a woman is anaemic, her baby is more likely to be anaemic, affecting 90 per cent of infants under the age of one year or younger. According to the Nepal Micronutrient Survey 1998, Kyoko Okamura of UNICEF Kathmandu’s Nutrition Section is emphatic about the consequences: ‘We are producing a whole generation of Nepalis who are anaemic. And this is not just a problem for the mothers and the babies. Untreated anaemia of a new born baby will diminish their cognitive development, slow mental growth, and work output in adults, and decrease physical performance in children less than 12 months of age.”

Nepal’s per capita intake is thus far anaemic. 25 per cent of the population suffers from anaemia. This is a very small ratio, less than 10 per cent is said to be anaemic. Little critical, questions is: are we anaemic? Are we developing anaemic babies, who are the most visible potential victims of anaemia? There is evidence that suggests anaemia decreases their intelligence quotient and affects the quality of their work. It eliminates the efficiency of some organs and systems that are responsible for the regular functioning of some organs. It affects the functioning of the heart, the brain, and the nervous system. It decreases the likelihood of early marriage, and the nervous system. It weakens the immune system and the people’s ability to fight infections.

The monsoon-heavy brown waters of the Bagmati will Friday host a unique flotilla of kayaks and rafts. The Second Bagmati River Festival will bring together environmentalists, school children, the tourism industry, and concerned citizens in a day-long celebration along the river from its headwaters in Sundarijal to Sankhamul.

The Bagmati River is the source of the Kathmandu Valley civilisation, the waters that nourish its culture and religion. And it is the main element of Kathmandu’s environmental regeneration. But it is now choking with waste, and has become a symbol of our negligence of the environment.

The Bagmati River Festival is jointly organised by the Nepal River Conservation Trust (NRCT) and the Friends of the Bagmati. Says veteran river guide and NRCT founder, Megh Ale: "We can clean this river, but to do that we have to look at the problems from the Bagmati’s perspective. That is why we want to raft down the river."

Twenty professional river guides will kick off the festival at 8AM on Friday, 23 August, with a kayak race from Sundarijal to Tilganga. Next, ten rafts holding VIPs, school children and representatives of local communities will leave Tilganga for Sankhamul. There, starting noon, there will be music and an exhibition with the Bagmati as backdrop.

Popular actors Niruta Singh and Dilip Rayamajhi will be guest stars, and Himalayan Feelings will be belting out music. Also attending will be Om Bikram Bista, Yogeshwor Amatya, Nalina Chitrakar, Tantric and others. And, since Friday is also Gai Jatra, present will be famous Nepali comedian duo Madan Krishna and Haribansa, and infamous Nepali satire poet, Chatyang Master.

Several Kathmandu Valley schools will put on an exhibition of photographs, Bagmati debris and water sample analyses. Also on display will be a container showing the residue from a distillation of Bagmati water. Other schools will have poster exhibitions and clay models of Kathmandu Valley, and will stage plays and skits.

Friends of the Bagmati, which is a pressure group that aims to restore the Bagmati to its traditional glory, says that the river festival is a unique partnership between like-minded conservation groups. Dr Suresh Raj Sharma, chairman of Friends of the Bagmati says: "The Bagmati River is in a terrible state, ecologically and culturally. It is the responsibility of each and every one of us to help restore the river to its original pristine state, and conserve the cultural, religious and architectural heritage of Kathmandu Valley."

BP’s mind is on trial and he, with Ganesh Man Singh, plan their defence. BP says that regardless of the outcome of the trial, he wants the document to be a testament of what he and his colleagues have been fighting for. But this energetic frame of mind soon disappears when BP acknowledges that he can do nothing to put weight physically to make sure that the prison authorities are doing their best to keep them totally cut off from the world — even for a request writing paper must go to the headquarters.

The Orinoco River of South America. The Orinoco River is located in Venezuela and branches into two main tributaries: the Orinoco River and the Caroni River. These rivers flow through the Orinoco Delta, which is one of the largest deltas in the world. The delta is formed by the confluence of the Orinoco and Caroni Rivers and is characterized by mangrove forests, mudflats, and lagoons. The Orinoco Delta is home to a diverse array of flora and fauna, including various species of birds, mammals, and reptiles. The delta is also an important habitat for migratory birds, providing a resting place and feeding grounds for millions of birds each year. The Orinoco River serves as a vital waterway for transportation and commerce in the region, facilitating the movement of goods and people. It is also a source of fresh water, irrigation, and hydroelectric power for the local population. The Orinoco River is an integral part of the ecosystems and economies of the countries through which it flows, highlighting the interconnectedness of human and natural systems. The Orinoco River and its delta play a crucial role in sustaining the biodiversity, culture, and livelihoods of the communities living along its banks.
THERE was a day in the year when Nepal can give us more joy than the other days in the year and that day is today. Being free, we are ever in the mood of fun. Jatra is the day when the joy of Nepali people and the joy of Nepal itself is at its peak.

The Nepal government has created a new festival of Jatra and it is called Guy Jatra, a day of fun for all. The objective of this festival is to create a spirit of fun and joy in the minds of people.

Guy Jatra is a festival celebrated with the participation of all the people of the country. It is a festival of fun and joy, where people of all ages participate and enjoy themselves.

The festival is celebrated with a lot of fun and joy, and people of all ages participate in it. The festival is celebrated with the participation of all the people of the country. It is a festival of fun and joy, where people of all ages participate and enjoy themselves.
