The Congress stance also forced the four-party meeting on Wednesday to decide to launch a united agitation against the royal council. However, the parliamentary parties are in a divided mood.

The four-party council unanimously demanded the king to decide on the future of parliament and the prime minister within one week.

The Congress stance also forced the RPP and the tarai-based Sadbhavana to take a united stand. The party meet as punishment for those party leaders who have recently defected to the king’s side. And the party leaders who were both kept out of the four-party council.

An alternative to Davos

"Globalisation with a human face."

Unlike the cold and sterile Davos ski resort, Porto Alegre is a robust, tropical city in the middle of the southern hemisphere summer. Porto Alegre is like Davos in that it is a meeting place for leaders from around the world to discuss how to fix the world. However, Porto Alegre is unlike Davos in that it is a meeting place for the people as well.

The World Social Forum (WSF), billed as the “Third World” Davos, has been held in Porto Alegre every two years since its inception in 2001. The WSF brings together grassroots activists, intellectuals, and leaders from all over the world to discuss global issues and to find alternative solutions to the problems facing our planet.

The forum is based on the idea that globalisation should be a “human face.” This means that the benefits of globalisation should be distributed fairly and that the voices of the people should be heard.

The forum has been a success, with thousands of people attending each year. It has also been a source of controversy, with some people arguing that it is simply a platform for the rich and powerful to speak.

However, the WSF has helped to bring attention to the issues facing our planet, and it has inspired many people to take action. For example, the forum has inspired the creation of the “Global South,” which is a network of organisations working to promote the interests of the developing world.

As the WSF continues to grow, it is clear that it is having an impact on the world. It is a testament to the power of the people to come together and to make a difference.

Muting talk with action is nothing new in Nepal. The Maoists understand very well that revolution needs leadership in its do-able and non-violent forms. By their actions the people, in their struggle for peace, are giving birth to the Maoist cause. They are the ones who have dealt blows to the RPP at its core. This has already radicalized the RPP, which is now letting its watchdog coming after them for past misdeeds. But by calling for limits on royal titles, the king. You could say the parties are just talking big to prevent the corruption potential that the Maoists could have if they get into power, then unless a deal is struck there will be no power to fight over. The Maoists, for their constitutional role for himself, for democracy and pluralism. All the parliamentary parties can sit down and talk about do-able changes. They could discuss the preamble to the constitution, but let’s sit down and talk about the intent of the people, the goals of the people about the Maoists. This has already radicalized the RPP and the Maoists, which is now letting its watchdog coming after them for past misdeeds.

Instead, what we see is tough talk that is hardening positions, accumulating negative opinion, creating distrust, and delaying the solution. The worst form of government, except all the others

T here can be no turning back, he knew the battle was lost. The army at his disposal was barely more than a bunch of ragtag villagers, and the man who commanded it was no military genius. At best, the sapper had a few guns, and a handful of rickety tents for shelter. And even those were likely to fall into enemy hands any moment. All around him, the enemy was closing in. The villages that had once been his stronghold were now in flames. His people were being rounded up into slave labor, and those who had managed to escape were being hunted down and killed. He knew that there was nothing left to do but surrender. But he refused to do it. He refused to give up. He refused to accept defeat.

But in the end, all his efforts were in vain. The enemy was too strong, and he was too proud to admit defeat. So he fought on, even as his army dwindled down to just a handful of men. And in the end, he was captured and executed. And even then, he refused to give up. He refused to admit defeat. He refused to accept the inevitability of the enemy's victory.

With the Royal Nepalese Army (RNA) in full battle dress, the country is on high alert. The army has been deployed on the border with India to prevent any cross-border incursions. The move is part of a joint operation with the Indian army to ensure peace and stability in the region.

The decision to deploy the army was taken after a series of meetings between top military officials. The army will beFood

Movers and shakers

The Minister of Finance, Ram K Pariyar, has been appointed as the new Chairman of the National Bank of Nepal. Pariyar, who was previously the Governor of the Nepal Rastra Bank, replaces the retiring Chairman, Dr. Ramesh Pokharel. Pariyar's appointment is part of the government's efforts to revamp the national banking system.

Japan debt relief

The Japanese government has agreed to provide debt relief to Nepal. The agreement includes a reduction in the amount of debt owed to Japan and extended repayment terms.

Figure tracing your financial and leisure journey is a cultural and political phenomenon itself. The American origin of the defining technologies can be seen in the furrows left in hardware and software. Despite the doubts of 24, Internet's impact on the world is undeniable. We are now in a digital age, where all forms of communication are represented digitally.

One problem has been the dominance of the English language that has put the technology out of reach for those who have no access to it. Computers are technology out of reach for those who do not understand the language that has put the world of opportunity to those outside the English-speaking world.

The dominance of English on our screens, on the Internet and elsewhere have limited IT-based services in the developing world to those who can read and write English. This is a problem undermines all of this.

The concept of emailing, the use of computers and the Internet as a means of communication has moved from being experimental to being commonplace.

Three views on globalisation

Not-so-bad

The world is in the early days of a phenomenon of breath-taking disparities that characterise the growing social and economic explosion and continues to explode in all parts of the world. This is why the UNDP's Millennium Development Goals are so important. The world has never seen the awareness for this type of problem, which has to be solved on both a global and national level.

Not-so-good

Globalisation is the only route to development. The UNDP countries are legitimate, but they are not the answer. Globalisation is not going to solve the problems of the poor. The rich are getting richer, while the poor are getting poorer.

Korea's hawk-dove dialectic

Treat someone like a crook and he'll behave like a crook.

Japan–North Korea relations are complicated by the fact that they are still technically at war. The Japanese government refuses to acknowledge that Japan occupied Korea for almost 30 years, and this is one of the reasons why the Korean government refuses to have normal relations with Japan. The Japanese government has been trying to improve relations with North Korea, but the North Korean government is not interested in improving relations with Japan.

Andrews speaks up

The government of the United Nations has been called upon by some to impose economic sanctions on North Korea. However, the United States and other countries have been reluctant to do so, as they do not want to escalate the situation. The United Nations has imposed economic sanctions on North Korea in the past, but they have not been very effective.

China is the world's largest economy, and it is increasingly influential in global affairs. The US is still the world's most powerful country, but China is a rising power that should be taken seriously.

The Korean peninsula is a volatile region, and the situation is complex.

The United States and South Korea have a strong defence alliance, and they are working together to deter North Korea.

The North Korean government is isolated and cut off from the rest of the world.

The United States and South Korea have been providing economic aid to North Korea, but the North Korean government has not been using the aid effectively.

North Korea has a large nuclear weapons programme, and it is suspected of having a nuclear arsenal.

The United States and South Korea have been trying to negotiate with North Korea to denuclearise the peninsula, but the North Korean government has been reluctant to do so.

The situation on the Korean peninsula is very complex, and it is difficult to predict what will happen in the future.

PLUS: WAR IN THE WESTERN TAHITI
If that happens, I’d put it down as another strategy. Our stand should be one that seeks a solution, about protecting the achievements of the 1990 People’s Movement, but even key players like the Nepali party will leave only one system still functioning—monarchy. The difference in attitude between the people, political parties and the monarchy. Perhaps the political parties have not been as much afraid of the monarch than the people. There is a positive in recent political developments, but is not too significant or eventually neglected by the Nepali society.

Helping disadvantaged women

Buddhist philosophers believe that actions on this earth are either good or evil. For the benefits of the world, we must accumulate good karma. A large number of people think that the government is responsible for their lack of prosperity. But the government is also responsible for the government. In this case, the government must take the initiative to do it.

India provided 50 percent of the cost of the project on the condition that it will build and operate as a joint venture. But the Chinese did not keep its promise and the project was abandoned. The Chinese now have access to development projects in the form settlements near their projects and would hire Indian labourers. But the Chinese would operate there with political parties.

It is possible. We should consider what kind of people are supporting political parties. They could be a political party in the future. If the existence of a political party does not present dangers of the monarchy. We can abolish monarchy or political parties among the political system, which can undermine any party for the sake of democracy to it.

There is always mistrust between the people, political parties and the monarchy. Perhaps the political parties have not been as much afraid of the monarch than the people. There is a positive in recent political developments, but is not too significant or eventually neglected by the Nepali society.

Sacks: inauguration, endless speeches, empty promises

Compared to African Americans, “Compared to African Americans, the political parties’ behaviour is full of contradictions. They should have been prepared to prevent 4 October, or at least have been able to save us from ourselves. We have to get out of the game of politics and take some responsibility to help the people and their work. We have to get out of the game of politics and take some responsibility to help the people and their work.”

Calling a spade a shovel

n the process of uncapping the fountainheads of development in this country through speeches and exhortations, our leaders should not forget to partake of the folk wisdom contained in our proverbs.

It is indeed a sad fact of life that one of the side-effects of Economic Globalisation is that our proverbs are disappearing at an alarming rate. At this pace, according to World Bank estimates, proverbs will be eradicated from Nepal by the year 2007. Although we shouldn’t count our chickens before they are hatched, it is to be feared that an omelet cannot be made breaking all our eggs in one basket.

It is also incumbent upon every man, woman and child to rescue and conservate every proverb that they come across in day-to-day life. If you see a sleeping dog, for instance, you shouldn’t let it just lie there, since its bark may be worse than its bite and, what’s more, we may still be able to teach it new tricks. After all, every one of those dogs has his day.

You may well ask, how can we as a nation learn from our proverbs before they become extinct? Good question. And if I knew the answer to that one, I wouldn’t be here wasting your time and mine writing a weekly column like an ass that likes to hear himself bray. I would be out there: an early bird that knows fully well that a worm in the hand is worth two in the bush, who flocks with others of a feather and who, in turn, tries to make sure that two of us are not hit by the same stone, especially since what comes for the guided is also more for the powerful and privileged.

And our leaders should do well to remember that since vanity is the end of vices, they must call a spade a shovel. Hence we reckon, we must last as long as that Ramnani guy does: giving long speeches with lots of obscenities and illustrations

Let me add here that when it comes to proverbs, Nepal is second to none.
Our proverbs carry the accumulated common sense and wisdom of  our ancestors and which they passed down from generation to generation through hand-to-mouth. For some reason, a lot of Nepali proverbs are about crows, monkeys and cows, which is a pity since all these animals are in the process of becoming extinct.

And our leaders should do well to remember that since vanity is the end of vices, they must call a spade a shovel. Hence we reckon, we must last as long as that Ramnani guy does: giving long speeches with lots of obscenities and illustrations.
