The 2015 Constitution

We have to make a constitution that is right for us, not one that fits the rightist agenda in the neighbourhood.

EDITORIAL PAGE 2

The 2015 Constitution

We have to make a constitution that is right for us, not one that fits the rightist agenda in the neighbourhood.
Tension is mounting between the two sides that have drifted apart, press statements have disclosed. In a leaked document on Power Trade Agreement (PTA) between the two countries and deals on the Upper Karnali, Arun 3 and Pancheswar on mutually favourable terms could ease power cuts in India and Nepal.

The paradigm shift in politics in India removed mistrust with Nepal, led directly to progress in economic cooperation. A country that has seen a 50-year saga of the Adhikari family, up from their deep slumber (‘The sad saga of the Adhikari family’, #736). Count me in for development is motivation. Himanshu Ghimire

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM

Everyone has the right to choose their religion. The British Ambassador personally has no qualms in calling for single ethnicity-based federation. And vice-versa for the advocates of Hindu Rastra. Jim Limbu

The Maoist ‘revolution’ was an upstream that will ensure his legacy in our nation’s history, all the while willfully ignoring public opinion. N

So, the question is not whether people have the right to choose their religion (of course everyone has that right) but why people in countries like the UK are not asked to choose between remaining a Christian state or being a democratic state (Britons most likely would say they are both) and why people in Nepal are being asked to do that? It is a false dichotomy.

Dev Batsya

Any other country would have declared the British Ambassador persona non grata and expelled him. A country that has seen a 50-year war has no right telling us Nepal how to or how not to deal with our religions. These white men still think they rule over us. Besides, our religious constitution provides for full religious freedom. So why did Andrew Sparkes have to talk about right to conversion, is he an evangelist? Canine Kathmandu

Jim Limbu

Nanda Prasad Adikari’s story is extremely sad, he had to die in order to finally wake up from their deep slumber (‘The sad saga of the Adhikari family’, Nepal Times Online). What good is a country where murders are free to roam? Thinker

Tsering Dolker Gurung

Constitution

If there was a national referendum on federalism based on ethnicity, I doubt if it would get more than 15% approval. ‘One month to go’, Editorial, #737. It is a debatable referendum on the issue which the NC-UML should have used to push for their agenda. We have seen from India and elsewhere that federalism and decolonisation of borders will play havoc in the path to progress and peace.

Namah

Pushpa Kamal Dahal, the next president of Nepal? Are you insane? Brian Metters

Narrow legalistic interpretation of our current political course sits uneasily with the spirit of consensus that has been the hallmark of the transitional Nepali polity (‘Contentious consensus’, Anurag Acharya, #737).

Anil Karki

The Maoist ‘revolution’ was hardly based on social justice hence I am not surprised that the new constitution will be a political compromise that none will own or want power. He used unsuspecting innocent Nepalis to propel himself onto the national political scene and since then has been doing the same. Now, his only chance for redemption is to turn over his agenda and include identity politics in the constitution. If not, he will settle for a post that will ensure his legacy in

The Modi administration view the deadlock over the new security. The UML’s KP Oli has suddenly become vociferously opposed to federalism with ethnic characteristics, even though it was already agreed that the names of future provinces would be finalised by future provincial legislatures. Dahal of the UCPN(M) has abruptly resurrected his call for a form of government with executive presidency, a post which, presumably, he would fill.

Needless to say, Nepal’s national identity should be defined by our cultural, linguistic, religious and ethnic diversity, not just by the Hindu-ness of our past rulers. We don’t want to change that just because some sections of a rightwing party in India thinks so. We need to decentre and devolve political power, but the Indian union may not exactly be the right model for us. We have to make a constitution that is right for us, not one that behoves a religious right governing party in the neighbourhood.
Let the festive spirit flow.

Celebrate responsibly.

Ballantine's
Stay True
Leave an impression.
Main Story

INTERESTING TIMES
Mallika Aryal

“Sometimes I forget there are men in our lives.”

It is 8AM in the 3,700 meter-high Kyangin Gumba Valley. Penjo Lama, 26, is dashing around her four-room guesthouse. She has already been up for a few hours. Her guesthouse was full for the last two days, but some of the guests are leaving today, freeing two rooms.

As she prepares breakfast, she can’t help but worry about whether or not she will find guests to take the rooms that are empty. “Everyday a room stays free, we lose financially,” she says, stoking the fireplace.

Penjo’s husband Jhandu is off in Kathmandu dropping off their children at a boarding school. The nearest primary school is a few hours walk away. Apart from her children’s education, the Lama couple is still paying off the loan they took out to build the guesthouse.

At noon, Penjo hurries towards Kyangin Gumba. There are already women crowding to find guests. By noon everyday trekkers start trickling in from Lantang Village, a three-hour walk away, and if Penjo is not proactive she won’t find any guests for her lodge.

After spending over two hours, however, no one turns up and she has to return to her guesthouse disappointed. It is mostly women who run the guesthouses here. “There may be exceptions, but most men in this town are useless,” says Jhuma Tamang, 30. The only time they miss men’s presence is when a big supply of food and other items have to be carried up from another town.

Penjo’s husband Jhandu is off in Kathmandu. The nearest primary school is a few hours walk away. Apart from her children’s education, the Lama couple is still paying off the loan they took out to build the guesthouse.

At noon, Penjo hurries towards Kyangin Gumba. There are already women crowding to find guests. By noon everyday trekkers start trickling in from Lantang Village, a three-hour walk away, and if Penjo is not proactive she won’t find any guests for her lodge.

After spending over two hours, however, no one turns up and she has to return to her guesthouse disappointed. It is mostly women who run the guesthouses here. “There may be exceptions, but most men in this town are useless,” says Jhuma Tamang, 30. The only time they miss men’s presence is when a big supply of food and other items have to be carried up from another town.

Penjo’s husband Jhandu is off in Kathmandu. The nearest primary school is a few hours walk away. Apart from her children’s education, the Lama couple is still paying off the loan they took out to build the guesthouse.

At noon, Penjo hurries towards Kyangin Gumba. There are already women crowding to find guests. By noon everyday trekkers start trickling in from Lantang Village, a three-hour walk away, and if Penjo is not proactive she won’t find any guests for her lodge.

After spending over two hours, however, no one turns up and she has to return to her guesthouse disappointed. It is mostly women who run the guesthouses here. “There may be exceptions, but most men in this town are useless,” says Jhuma Tamang, 30. The only time they miss men’s presence is when a big supply of food and other items have to be carried up from another town.

Penjo’s husband Jhandu is off in Kathmandu. The nearest primary school is a few hours walk away. Apart from her children’s education, the Lama couple is still paying off the loan they took out to build the guesthouse.

At noon, Penjo hurries towards Kyangin Gumba. There are already women crowding to find guests. By noon everyday trekkers start trickling in from Lantang Village, a three-hour walk away, and if Penjo is not proactive she won’t find any guests for her lodge.

After spending over two hours, however, no one turns up and she has to return to her guesthouse disappointed. It is mostly women who run the guesthouses here. “There may be exceptions, but most men in this town are useless,” says Jhuma Tamang, 30. The only time they miss men’s presence is when a big supply of food and other items have to be carried up from another town.

Penjo’s husband Jhandu is off in Kathmandu. The nearest primary school is a few hours walk away. Apart from her children’s education, the Lama couple is still paying off the loan they took out to build the guesthouse.

At noon, Penjo hurries towards Kyangin Gumba. There are already women crowding to find guests. By noon everyday trekkers start trickling in from Lantang Village, a three-hour walk away, and if Penjo is not proactive she won’t find any guests for her lodge.

After spending over two hours, however, no one turns up and she has to return to her guesthouse disappointed. It is mostly women who run the guesthouses here. “There may be exceptions, but most men in this town are useless,” says Jhuma Tamang, 30. The only time they miss men’s presence is when a big supply of food and other items have to be carried up from another town.

Penjo’s husband Jhandu is off in Kathmandu. The nearest primary school is a few hours walk away. Apart from her children’s education, the Lama couple is still paying off the loan they took out to build the guesthouse.

At noon, Penjo hurries towards Kyangin Gumba. There are already women crowding to find guests. By noon everyday trekkers start trickling in from Lantang Village, a three-hour walk away, and if Penjo is not proactive she won’t find any guests for her lodge.

After spending over two hours, however, no one turns up and she has to return to her guesthouse disappointed. It is mostly women who run the guesthouses here. “There may be exceptions, but most men in this town are useless,” says Jhuma Tamang, 30. The only time they miss men’s presence is when a big supply of food and other items have to be carried up from another town.

Penjo’s husband Jhandu is off in Kathmandu. The nearest primary school is a few hours walk away. Apart from her children’s education, the Lama couple is still paying off the loan they took out to build the guesthouse.

At noon, Penjo hurries towards Kyangin Gumba. There are already women crowding to find guests. By noon everyday trekkers start trickling in from Lantang Village, a three-hour walk away, and if Penjo is not proactive she won’t find any guests for her lodge.

After spending over two hours, however, no one turns up and she has to return to her guesthouse disappointed. It is mostly women who run the guesthouses here. “There may be exceptions, but most men in this town are useless,” says Jhuma Tamang, 30. The only time they miss men’s presence is when a big supply of food and other items have to be carried up from another town.
After nearly 5 years, it feels good to be back in Kathmandu, visiting family. Despite some shiny new buildings and wider roads it doesn’t appear that much has changed: dusty dogs still sprawl in the gutters, sun seekers emerge onto the sidewalks with the rise of the winter morning sun, and the electricity disappears for large chunks of time each day.

All these invoke some sort of twisted nostalgia, admittedly available only to those of us with a return ticket in our pockets.

What I find irksome though is that the Birendra International Convention Centre (BICC) which was converted into a Constituent Assembly remains home to 601 Nepalis ostensibly at work drafting a new constitution. To an outsider, what really appears to be happening is that the same handful of ‘leaders’ are jockeying in the back rooms for political, and personal, gain at the expense of nearly 30 million people.

I have always marveled at the patience of the Nepali people. And how utterly disappointing it is to think back to April 2006, when I walked with tens of thousands of people on the Ring Road, men, women and children marching purposefully to a bright new future. Today, they are still sitting in the dark for half the day.

Editorials in the Nepali Times are still optimistic that the new constitution will happen, and remove a yoke that has been dragging down the country’s development for six years. I wished I shared that optimism.

However, in the interest of doing something other than naysay, I propose the following: tally up the amount of money that has been spent so far paying the salaries of CA members, start a meter running from that figure and update it every second, like a clock. Place that running total on a sign near the BICC where the party leaders are likely to see it each day. It will remind them, and everyone else passing by, that they are being paid to do nothing, at least based on the lack of a constitution to date. If the leaders are in fact influenced by public opinion, this just might turn up the heat.

If authorities don’t allow a physical sign to be erected, I suggest that an online news site put one on a conspicuous part of its homepage like the ‘Death Clock’ that looks at how tax dollars for federal security spending in the United States could be reallocated through interactive graphics.

I’ve been told that Nepal no longer cares about the millions being spent on constitution-making, or even if a new law of the land emerges by 22 January. While I couldn’t blame them for such apathy and pessimism, part of me would mourn the death of the revolutionary spirit that I witnessed on the Ring Road in 2006. Marty Logan worked in Nepal from 2005 to 2010, first as a desk editor at Nepali Times and then at the United Nations. He now lives with his family in Canada.
Lack of awareness about fluid intake and overwork has exposed many Nepalis to the risk of kidney failure, but a breakdown of kidney transplants reflects a deep gender disparity.

After transplants were first performed in Nepal six years ago, nearly 400 patients have received kidneys from donors. But 90 percent of them are men, and 80 percent of the donors are women.

The Human Organ Transplant Centre (HOTC) in Bhaktapur (pic, right) has performed 56 kidney transplants in the past year of which only eight are women. One of them is Zarina Shrestha, 33, whose story is emblematic of the problems faced by female kidney patients needing transplants.

When her body started swelling a year ago, Zarina became a double victim: of the disease and her husband’s unkindness. When both her kidneys failed, she needed a transplant. On the way back from hospital, she remembers hoping that her husband could donate her one of his kidneys. Instead, he got angry in the car and shouted at her for having contracted such an expensive disease. “I never thought my husband could say such harsh words when I needed his support the most, he screamed at me saying how unlucky he was to marry me and said he would marry another woman to help him with household work.”

Zarina sobbed as she related this from her hospital bed (pic, above) last week after finally receiving a kidney from her brother. She needs a dialysis twice a week and the procedures cost her Rs 35,000 each time besides the Rs 500,000 for the transplant operation itself.

“My father passed away when I was a toddler, so my brother took his place for me, he has been taking care of me since and came to my rescue,” she says, adding that her brother is also paying for all her expenses. Zarina has a 12-year-old son who came forward to offer one of his kidneys when he found out his father refused. Zarina’s brother immediately said he would donate his kidney to his sister when he heard of her need.

The HOTC’s Pukar Chandra Shrestha says Zarina is the first woman who was offered kidney by her brother. He said it was rare for a male donor to come forward to help a female relative. There are only a few cases where a husband donates a kidney to the wife.

“I am ashamed to say that Nepali men are very selfish and don’t offer to save the lives of female family members, even when they know that the donor can live with one kidney.”

Shrestha told us. “Mothers, sisters, wives come forward readily to donate their kidneys to ailing relatives, but not the husbands and brothers, that is the bitter truth.”

To address this gender disparity in kidney donation, HOTC and Aarogya Foundation have started giving Rs 50,000 to male donors. Zarina’s brother was the first donor to receive the incentive.

Every year, 3,000 Nepalis need kidney transplants and this number is growing with urbanisation and lack of awareness about precursor factors like dehydration, chronic infections and untreated hypertension. Only 10 percent of kidney patients get proper treatment, and most patients can’t afford transplants.

“Dialysis is not a long-term solution, kidney patient must transplant to have a longer life,” Shrestha said, “but it is expensive, even I can’t afford the expenses if I got a transplant.”

Nepali law forbids kidney transplant outside immediate family members to control the illegal kidney trade, but experts say an amendment is needed to prevent people from going to India for transplant if a family member doesn’t agree to donate.

Zarina is grateful to her brother for saving her life, but many other female kidney patients in Nepal are not so lucky. For doctors like Shrestha this is a manifestation of patriarchy that they see every day in their kidney ward. He says: “I have seen parents pressuring their sons not to donate kidneys to their daughters-in-law, in most cases the feeling is if she dies he can always marry a healthy woman.”

A KIDNEY HAS NO GENDER

But transplants are heavily skewed in favour of men

BINITA DAHAL

A KIDNEY HAS NO GENDER

High Quality Stone Arts Manufacturer & Exporter

Our work in International Countries:
Japan, U.S.A, Germany, Singapore, Holland, Switzerland, London, Hongkong etc.

Factory
Budai, Gwarko, Lalitpur, Nepal
Tel./Fax: 977 1 4201080, 5200125

Show-Room
Budai Mahal, Eskal Adarsh Hotel, Kathmandu, Tel: 4253347
Email: jagatstone@yahoo.com
www.jagatstoneinternational.org

Our work in Hotel Hyatt

Stone Carving

Our work in Hotel Daruika's

HIMAL

9 कार्यकालीक

हिमाल

हिमालको साथमा उपहार हातमा
We are now in that phase of deep winter when Kathmandu is actually warmer than the Tarai towns, which have been enveloped in fog for days on end. This is a phenomenon of the Indo-Gangetic plains and satellite images show the ground-hugging fog stretching all the way from Pakistan across northern India to Bangladesh. Water vapour from winter irrigation, crop residues, and industrial smog combine to make the smog too thick for the sun to burn off. The bad news is that the Tarai fog will get worse in coming winters as pollution levels rise in northern India.

SANJEEV SHARMA

When acclaimed Indian TV journalist Smita Sharma spoke to former Prime Minister Baburam Bhattarai in Nepali, it was his wife Hisila Yami who was most surprised. Smita had gone to Baluwatar to interview Bhattarai and still remembers the look on Yami’s face when she explained her Nepal connection.

Smita’s grandparents, originally from Syangja, had to move to India because they were an inter-caste couple. “Their marriage wasn’t accepted by the society,” says Smita, who is now in charge of foreign affairs at TV Today Network, one of India’s leading news television networks.

Growing up with her family in a small town in West Bengal where the Sharmas were based, Smita always dreamt of moving to the big city. She says journalism attracted her because of its vast domain, story telling opportunities and the right to question.

Smita began her career in 2003 as a junior correspondent for Doordarshan, the Indian public broadcaster but, it was anchoring for a youth talk show for another news channel that made her a TV celebrity in the Indian media.

“Many people in small cities across India remember me from that program,” says Smita who studied English and has a PG diploma in Mass Communication from Jadavpur University, Kolkata. She also topped her batch while studying Broadcasting Journalism at Indian Institute of Mass Communication in New Delhi.

In an industry where sensational journalism is so widespread, Smita has carved a niche for hard-hitting live coverage of world events. Whether it is riots in Egypt, protests in Bangladesh or elections in Pakistan, Smita has been on the scene to report it all live for viewers back home in India.

In 2013, she received the prestigious Ramnath Goenka Excellence Award in Journalism for her reportage on Kashmir Valley uprising in 2010. Smita has reported for both the Hindi and English channels of Network 18, where she has been working since 2005.

A simple google search is enough to yield an impressive list of her work on domestic as well as foreign affairs. Smita’s report on Badrinath floods last year and her interview with Chinese Foreign Minister Wang Yi earlier this year top most searches.

“Journalism is a profession of perseverance and diligence,” says Smita, who considers the sensational news stories in Indian news channels just competition for eyeballs.

Smita was in Kathmandu to cover the SAARC Summit and her moderation in the ‘India Today Global Round Table’ during the summit was well received.

“For SAARC to work it is imperative that India and Pakistan resolve their differences,” says Smita, adding that the lukewarm relations between the two countries was evident in the Kathmandu symposium as well. She is a bit more positive about Nepal-India relations: “Considering PM Modi’s tendency to keep everything under control, the Nepal-India ties will be dealt at a political level rather than through security agencies.”

Smita’s book Travelogue in Pakistan is set to be released soon.
Slam it, Sarah Kay, an internationally acclaimed spoken word poet, will be performing live in Kathmandu. Rs 700, 27 December, 2 to 5pm, Alliance Française, Tripureshwor, (01)4241163

#Occupy, A collection of art objects with global conscience. Till 7 January 2015, 10am to 6.30pm, The City Museum Kathmandu, Darbar Marg

Photography workshop, A unique photography workshop for all budding photographers - hobbyists, non-professionals and beginners. 7 to 9pm, 29 December, SCC Kathmandu, Kupondole, www.facebook.com/scikhathmandu

Tokyo to Kathmandu, Recollections in print of artist Kabi Raj Lama’s artistic and spiritual quest from Tokyo to Kathmandu. 7-10 December, 7 am to 8 pm, Siddhankha Art Gallery, Babar Mahal Revisted

Malini, A charity show of Rabindranath Tagore’s Malini in support of Nepal Critical Care Development Foundation. Rs 500, 15 January 2015, 4.30pm to 6pm, Theatre Village, Lajimpat

Pedal power, Hop on your cycle and rally to St Xavier’s School in Godavari to collect money for the underprivileged children of the area. Rs 400 (students) & Rs 600 (others), 27 December, 9am onwards, Patan Darbar Square, 9849200119

Newari folk, Dhon Cholection, an adaptation of Satya Mohan Joshi’s Buddhimati Dhon Cholection. 28 January 2015, 4.45pm, Shilpee Natya Samuha, Battisputali

Ultra run, Participate in an ultra distance trail race in the northern hills of Kathmandu starting at the Shivapuri National Park. 3 January 2015, Shivapuri National Park, More information and registration www.ultratrailkathmandu.com, info@trailrunningnepal.org

Song of sorrow, Peeda Geet, a Nepali drama about an old man’s struggle after being displaced from his village. 28 December to 10 January 2015, 5.30pm, Theatre Village, Lajimpat

Fire and Ice, For the best pizzas in town, and much more, Theatre Village, Lajimpat

New year at New Orleans, Celebrate New Year’s Eve with Peking duck and roast pork cooked Danish style with great wine deals and more. 6.30pm onwards, Thamel, (01)4700736

Mike’s Breakfast, Huge breakfasts and a never-ending supply of coffee amidst a lush garden setting characterise this cafe, popular among tourists and locals alike. Naxal, 4424103

The Old House, A beautifully renovated neo-colonial building, which houses an adventurous restaurant dedicated to the art of French cooking. Babar Mahal, (01)4550971

Tokyo to Kathmandu, Recollections in print of artist Kabi Raj Lama’s artistic and spiritual quest from Tokyo to Kathmandu. 7-10 December, 7 am to 8 pm, Siddhankha Art Gallery, Babar Mahal Revisted

Malini, A charity show of Rabindranath Tagore’s Malini in support of Nepal Critical Care Development Foundation. Rs 500, 15 January 2015, 4.30pm to 6pm, Theatre Village, Lajimpat

Pedal power, Hop on your cycle and rally to St Xavier’s School in Godavari to collect money for the underprivileged children of the area. Rs 400 (students) & Rs 600 (others), 27 December, 9am onwards, Patan Darbar Square, 9849200119

Newari folk, Dhon Cholection, an adaptation of Satya Mohan Joshi’s Buddhimati Dhon Cholection. 28 January 2015, 4.45pm, Shilpee Natya Samuha, Battisputali

Ultra run, Participate in an ultra distance trail race in the northern hills of Kathmandu starting at the Shivapuri National Park. 3 January 2015, Shivapuri National Park, More information and registration www.ultratrailkathmandu.com, info@trailrunningnepal.org

Song of sorrow, Peeda Geet, a Nepali drama about an old man’s struggle after being displaced from his village. 28 December to 10 January 2015, 5.30pm, Theatre Village, Lajimpat

Fire and Ice, For the best pizzas in town, and much more, Theatre Village, Lajimpat

New year at New Orleans, Celebrate New Year’s Eve with Peking duck and roast pork cooked Danish style with great wine deals and more. 6.30pm onwards, Thamel, (01)4700736

Mike’s Breakfast, Huge breakfasts and a never-ending supply of coffee amidst a lush garden setting characterise this cafe, popular among tourists and locals alike. Naxal, 4424103

The Old House, A beautifully renovated neo-colonial building, which houses an adventurous restaurant dedicated to the art of French cooking. Babar Mahal, (01)4550971

Tokyo to Kathmandu, Recollections in print of artist Kabi Raj Lama’s artistic and spiritual quest from Tokyo to Kathmandu. 7-10 December, 7 am to 8 pm, Siddhankha Art Gallery, Babar Mahal Revisted

Malini, A charity show of Rabindranath Tagore’s Malini in support of Nepal Critical Care Development Foundation. Rs 500, 15 January 2015, 4.30pm to 6pm, Theatre Village, Lajimpat

Pedal power, Hop on your cycle and rally to St Xavier’s School in Godavari to collect money for the underprivileged children of the area. Rs 400 (students) & Rs 600 (others), 27 December, 9am onwards, Patan Darbar Square, 9849200119

Newari folk, Dhon Cholection, an adaptation of Satya Mohan Joshi’s Buddhimati Dhon Cholection. 28 January 2015, 4.45pm, Shilpee Natya Samuha, Battisputali

Ultra run, Participate in an ultra distance trail race in the northern hills of Kathmandu starting at the Shivapuri National Park. 3 January 2015, Shivapuri National Park, More information and registration www.ultratrailkathmandu.com, info@trailrunningnepal.org

Song of sorrow, Peeda Geet, a Nepali drama about an old man’s struggle after being displaced from his village. 28 December to 10 January 2015, 5.30pm, Theatre Village, Lajimpat
MUSIC

Deathfest, Accomplished – local and international – Extreme Metal bands came together to celebrate the glorious genre. 9 and 10 January, www.facebook.com/NEPAL.DEATHFEST

Night, Popular new school folk band Night launches their new album Ani Ukali, Sangai Orali. Rs 700 (with CD), 27 December, 5 to 7pm, Theatre Village, Lajimpat

Rocking it, 1974 AD and Anuprastha perform with students, food and game stalls. 27 December, 5pm onwards, Jawalakhel Ground, 2298341057

Musical Eve, Celebrate New Year’s Eve with live performances by 1974AD and Parbat Rai, dance shows and a special dinner. 31 December, Summit Hotel, Kupondole

GETAWAYS

Fulbari Resort, Enjoy the scenic view of Pokhara as you pamper yourself with tennis, golf, food and drinks. Pokhara, 061/465100, info@fulbariresort.com

Athiti Resort, A perfect place to stay, nearby pool, massage, sauna, and delicious food of your choice. Sharivast, Lakeside, Pokhara, 061/400511/2248

Temple Tree Resort and Spa, Peaceful atmosphere, swimming pool, massage parlour, and sauna, it’ll be hard to leave once you go in. Gaunghat, Lakeside, 061/485019

New beginning, Tap your toes to DJ music and special dance performances followed by a lavish gala dinner for New Year’s Eve. Rs 5,000 (single), Rs 9,999 (couple). 31 December, Garden Pavilion, Hotel Shangri La, Lajimpat, 061/400299

Waterfront Resort, The lakeside hotel invites you for special barbecue dinners on Friday and lunches on Saturday. Sedhi Height, Lakeside Road, Pokhara, 061/466203/004, www.waterfronthotelnepal.com

Buddha Maya Gardens Hotel, Add value to your travel in Lumbini with a stay at probably the best hotel in the area. Lumbini, 061/580220, info@ktmgh.com

Synology

Authorised Partner NEXUS SOLUTIONS

Award Winning Dedicated Network Attached Storage (NAS) Provider: www.synology.com

- Full Integration with Active Directory, VMware, Hyper-V, Citrix
- Support for traditional & Hybrid RAID
- Award Winning (Linux-based)
  - DiskStation Manager (DSM) UI
  - High Performance, High Reliability
  - Affordability & Scalability upto 48TB
- Unbeatable Storage Systems (Purpose-built File-Level NAS & Block-Level SAN Storage)

Models available: 1-Bay, 2-Bay, 4-Bay, 8-Bay, 10-Bay, 12-Bay

CUSTOMER CARE

5005601-07 Ext. 243

Himalmedia Pvt. Ltd. Patan Dikha, Lalitpur

Did your paper arrive on time this morning? If not, call our

- Hero
  - Jupiter
    - ₹ 4,290
  - Smart
    - ₹ 6,293
  - Passion
    - ₹ 5,290

- सहज या जोरहयुत चलन मोटरसाइकल फाइनेंसी सुविधा उपलब्ध है।

हिंदीः अत्यन्त सरल फाइनेंसी सुविधाः

न्यूनतम ग्राउंप रेसिडेंसः

र. 8,800/-

मा Hero वाहन लोकः

जोरहयुत फाइनेंसी क्रियाः

- Jupiter
  - ₹ 4,290
- Smart
  - ₹ 6,293
- Passion
  - ₹ 5,290

- सहज या जोरहयुत चलन मोटरसाइकल फाइनेंसी सुविधा उपलब्ध है।

सहज या जोरहयुत चलन मोटरसाइकल फाइनेंसी सुविधा उपलब्ध है।

सहज या जोरहयुत चलन मोटरसाइकल फाइनेंसी सुविधा उपलब्ध है।

जोरहयुत फाइनेंसी क्रियाः

- Jupiter
  - ₹ 4,290
- Smart
  - ₹ 6,293
- Passion
  - ₹ 5,290
Katniss Everdeen, the heroine of the super successful The Hunger Games series, may have made many pick up their bows and arrows in the west, but in Nepal the sport still lags behind in popularity.

Hoping to change this is entrepreneur Navin Basnyet whose latest venture, The Best Archery, is the first of its kind indoor archery shooting range in Nepal. “Although our primary goal is to attract amateurs to take up archery as a recreational activity, we also want to promote archery as a sport in Nepal,” says Basnyet.

The shooting range in Jhamsikhel is a standard 18m indoor facility. Opened last month, the place has been getting a fair number of aspiring bowmen. Professional archer Ongyal Gurung (pic, above) who has represented Nepal in several international competitions and now conducts classes at the range says: “This is an excellent startup because there is a shortage of shooting ranges in Kathmandu.” Gurung himself practiced shooting arrows at dumping sites near Chobhar. Archery has long been part of culture of people from the mountain communities but modern archery has yet to take off. Gurung wants to bridge the gap between the two by bringing archers from Manang to Kathmandu to train and practice at the range.

“When I took a few classes in rural areas, I noticed that some people were holding their bows horizontally instead of vertically. They have the skills but lack knowledge,” says Gurung who would like to see more Nepali archers at international stages. The Best Archery welcomes all interested to play. “Archery has no height, age or gender barriers and I believe anyone will enjoy it within minutes..."
Want to practice your strokes but the December cold is preventing you from driving all the way to Gokarna or Gaushala? Or you are worried the rain will play spoilsport? Indoor golf simulation may just be what you are looking for.

But, wait. You can only use the simulation room at the Nepal Golf Zone (NGZ) in Gairidhara after the inhouse instructor has given you a pass on your golfing ability.

“Because the simulator is of high quality and very expensive, we have to be very careful,” says Pawan Chitrakar of NGZ.

However, for those just starting out, NGZ also has a driving range (pic, above) where for Rs 300, a person can strike 100 balls. And for Rs 500, you get to strike unlimited balls.

The place also has a membership plan which costs Rs 3,000 per month. A professional coach will be made available for an extra Rs 5,000.

Once you finish your course, and are deemed ‘ready’, you can enjoy golfing in the Indoor Golf Simulation room which accommodates two to six players. There are also a myriad of courses to choose from.

After taking over the establishment from previous owners, Chitrakar has been working to revive the place. An open bar where sports fans can enjoy watching football has been added to the backyard, and there is plans to open a cigar room for “the gentlemen”.

What remains the same is Maan nam, a Korean restaurant inside the complex, a popular place for lovers of Hankook cuisine.

While Tuesday evenings are for Salsa, it is live music time on Friday nights and on Sunday mornings, Maan nam hosts a farmers’ market. Crafted in Kathmandu, a handicrafts manufacturer also has a small outlet at the NGZ building.
For someone like me, who grew up reading (and loving) J.R.R. Tolkien’s The Hobbit and, inevitably, The Lord of the Rings trilogy, it was with bated breath and not a small amount of apprehension that I awaited the cinematic adaptations of these classics by Peter Jackson, a relatively unknown director at the time.

By my standards, his adaptation of The Lord of the Rings books couldn’t have been better. Perfectly cast, and lovingly adapted, the films are a delight. When rumours began circulating about Jackson helming The Hobbit, fans (this reviewer included) had only one question: could we really hope for more of this kind of same?

Unfortunately, the Hollywood marketing machine, capitalising on the spectacular success of the first trilogy, decided to do the same with the adaptation of The Hobbit, a slim volume that while dense with the lore of Middle Earth hardly warrants three films.

So it would just be bad judgement to claim that this latest trilogy, parceled out over the last three Christmas seasons aren’t made with the intent of extorting money from viewers who wish to prolong their sojourn in Tolkien’s beloved Middle Earth for as long as possible.

The final chapter begins where The Hobbit: The Desolation of Smaug (2013) ended. Smaug, the dragon (voiced by Benedict Cumberbatch) has desolated Laketown near the Lonely Mountain in his rage after discovering that Bilbo Baggins (Martin Freeman) has sneaked in under his nose to steal his vast treasure.

Equally menacing is a planned assault on the treasures of the mountain by the Orcs (a deadly force spawned by Sauron, the Dark one), and by the elves and the people of Laketown all of whom have been promised a share of the fabled unimaginable riches hoarded by Smaug.

While non-fantasy lovers might find themselves impatient of this final film that winds up the fortunes of our favourite characters including Gandalf (Ian McKellan), Galadriel (Cate Blanchett), Legolas (Orlando Bloom), and Thorin Okenshield (Richard Armitage), I would say that for the most part, I thoroughly enjoyed this well made indulgence. Peter Jackson as usual stays true to Tolkien’s work, while bowing perhaps just a little to Hollywood’s avarice.

If this review appears incomprehensible to you, I apologise. This particular week, the column was written for lovers of Tolkien who are up to speed on their Middle Earth trivia. Perhaps, it will prompt those who are intrigued to go out and read the books? They will keep you company for the rest of your life. That is a promise. You can decide for yourself if you feel the same way about the films.

MUST SEE
Sophia Pande

Peter Jackson, a relatively unknown director at the time, cast, and lovingly adapted, the films are a delight. When rumours began circulating about Jackson helming The Hobbit, fans (this reviewer included)
In November 2012, a young Nepali woman returning from Saudi Arabia, was raped and robbed by immigration police in Kathmandu, prompting protests across the capital. Public outrage over the crime spilled into the streets in front of the Prime Minister’s official residence in Baluwatar and expanded to include other incidents of violence against women in the country. The movement spread through social media and was called Occupy Baluwatar.

Many artists took part in the demonstrations, but one piece of artwork conceived specially for the occasion was never shown: Aditya Aryal’s image representing a topless Kumari holding hands on her head, with butterfly wings behind her with the inscription ‘Rape Me’ over the top.

Two years later, this audacious artwork is finally on display as part of #Occupy: an expression of global conscience that is on at the City Museum till 7 January. The exhibition gathers images from the Occupy movements in New York (Occupy Wall Street), Hong-Kong (Occupy Central) and Kathmandu (Occupy Baluwatar).

Museum director Kashish Das Shrestha curated the exhibition to relive the worldwide outrage that had its own manifestation on the streets of Kathmandu. “It was a social experiment stirring reflection,” he said, “and I hope the audience will feel something in their hearts.”

Aryal himself felt the Kumari image was too sensitive to be exhibited at the time. “The street art scene of Kathmandu was too sensitive to be exhibited at the time,” he said, “and I’m happy that a Nepali, moreover a Newar, curator understood my work.”

“Ideas for a revolution in our beliefs that we can’t live with the coincidence of women?”

Aryal remembers thinking: “If we worship goddesses, why cannot we respect real women?”

The wings on the Kumari are a throwback to the Nirvana album In Utero and the song Rape Me was written by Kurt Cobain to express his feelings about his family’s privacy being constantly ‘raped’ by the media.

After Occupy Baluwatar, Aditya Aryal (pic, left) became a well-known street artist who goes under the pseudonym of Sadhu-X and his works have been exhibited in Kathmandu with those of his friends from Artlab Life collective.

He tried to put up ‘Rape Me’, but no gallery in Kathmandu would risk putting it up. As in India, artists and galleries have been threatened and attacked for depicting religious motifs. Aryal maintains that he doesn’t intend any disrespect to anyone’s faith.

City Museum’s Shrestha knows he is dealing with a sensitive issue, but adds that he felt it was important to shock people about impunity and injustice. He sums it up: “There’s no reflection without provocation.”

Aditya Aryal says he is glad Shrestha agreed to take the risk. “I try to make people face their contradictions,” he said, “and I’m happy that a Nepali, moreover a Newar, curator understood my work.”

Stéphane Huët
#Occupy: an expression of global conscience
The City Museum
Unit 7 January 2015
www.thecitymuseum.org

---

When in doubt, settle for Chinese is my eating out philosophy. And, that’s how we landed in Lao Beijing, amongst the many, many restaurants at Lakeside in Pokhara.

The narrow path that leads to the restaurant reminded this writer of Hutongs in Beijing from where the owner, Liu Xiansheng, comes.

Liu came to Pokhara last year, fell in love with the place, and decided to stay. Dissatisfied with presentation of Chinese cuisine as an oily and spicy fare, he decided to stay. Dissatisfied with the presentation of Chinese cuisine as an oily and spicy fare, he decided to open Lao Beijing in May this year to introduce traditional, northern flavours to diners who are only familiar with Szechuan-Chinese dishes.

“All our dishes are prepared with minimum oil and spice, ours is more home style cooking,” said Liu. We thought so too.

The first dish that we tried - the Soya bean paste noodles (Rs 400) - set the precedent for rest to follow. The noodles, prepared by hand, (Lao Beijing serves both handpulled and machine made noodles) was served with shredded cucumber and tomato slices and had an authentic Beijing taste - courtesy of the sauces that Liu imports from the Chinese capital.

We also ordered two other noodle dishes: Sesame paste noodles (Rs 400) and Noodles with gravy (Rs 400). Both tasted divine, and celebrated its ingredients that are unique to Chinese cuisine. The gravy, prepared with pork, dry lily, agaric, eggs is a traditional Chinese family recipe that all foodies should try.

Lao Beijing also offers a variety of Chinese dumplings. Unlike the Nepali way of cooking it, the dumplings at Lao’s are poached. We tried the one with pork and Chinese cabbage (Rs 400). It was fresh, and bursting with flavours. If you like flower-made dumplings, opt for the steamed bun (Rs 50 per piece) which is cooked for hours, was another crowd pleaser.

Fried pork with cabbage (Rs 350) and fried Chinese cabbage with vinegar and dried chili (Rs 250) were two other dishes that we ate which helped quell a little bit of the homesickness we were feeling.

The average price per person comes down to Rs 500, a bargain for the taste and quality of the dishes on offer if you ask me.

Claire Li Yingxue
How to get there: Lao Beijing is at Lakeside, Pokhara next to Standard Chartered Bank.

---

ART FOR HEART’S SAKE

When in doubt, settle for Chinese is my eating out philosophy. And, that’s how we landed in Lao Beijing, amongst the many, many restaurants at Lakeside in Pokhara.

The narrow path that leads to the restaurant reminded this writer of Hutongs in Beijing from where the owner, Liu Xiansheng, comes.

Liu came to Pokhara last year, fell in love with the place, and decided to stay. Dissatisfied with presentation of Chinese cuisine as an oily and spicy fare, he decided to open Lao Beijing in May this year to introduce traditional, northern flavours to diners who are only familiar with Szechuan-Chinese dishes.

“All our dishes are prepared with minimum oil and spice, ours is more home style cooking,” said Liu. We thought so too.

The first dish that we tried - the Soya bean paste noodles (Rs 400) - set the precedent for rest to follow. The noodles, prepared by hand, (Lao Beijing serves both handpulled and machine made noodles) was served with shredded cucumber and tomato slices and had an authentic Beijing taste - courtesy of the sauces that Liu imports from the Chinese capital.

We also ordered two other noodle dishes: Sesame paste noodles (Rs 400) and Noodles with gravy (Rs 400). Both tasted divine, and celebrated its ingredients that are unique to Chinese cuisine. The gravy, prepared with pork, dry lily, agaric, eggs is a traditional Chinese family recipe that all foodies should try.

Lao Beijing also offers a variety of Chinese dumplings. Unlike the Nepali way of cooking it, the dumplings at Lao’s are poached. We tried the one with pork and Chinese cabbage (Rs 400). It was fresh, and bursting with flavours. If you like flower-made dumplings, opt for the steamed bun (Rs 50 per piece) which is cooked for hours, was another crowd pleaser.

Fried pork with cabbage (Rs 350) and fried Chinese cabbage with vinegar and dried chili (Rs 250) were two other dishes that we ate which helped quell a little bit of the homesickness we were feeling.

The average price per person comes down to Rs 500, a bargain for the taste and quality of the dishes on offer if you ask me.

Claire Li Yingxue
How to get there: Lao Beijing is at Lakeside, Pokhara next to Standard Chartered Bank.
Legionnaires’ Disease

Legionnaires’ Disease (LD). The term may sound unfamiliar to Nepalis, but the type of pneumonia LD refers to, was recently found in some patients in Kathmandu. Luckily, there have been no reports of new cases. LD is classically thought of as pneumonia that is contacted by aerosolization, contaminated with Legionella, lives in water and also inside amoebas (single cell organisms) that are found in water. The water sources most often implicated for harbouring Legionella are shower sprays, air-conditioners, humidifiers, decorative fountains, respiratory therapy equipment and even roadside puddles which are plentiful in Nepal. Although proper chlorination of the water may help to fight off the bacteria, it is known to easily resist low levels of chlorine in the water.

The good news is that person-to-person transmission is not known to happen with this disease, meaning unlike respiratory illnesses such as viral diseases and tuberculosis, LD is not transmitted by droplet infection.

How this pneumonia got its name is an interesting story.

In the summer of 1976, at the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel in Philadelphia, USA, the American Legion (organisation of US war veterans) was holding its 58th annual convention. The water in the hotel’s air conditioning system was contaminated with Legionella and the infection quickly spread to the attendees. Presentations ranged from mild flu-like symptoms to multisystem organ failure. Of the 182 people infected, 29 died. Although Legionella was not identified until 1976, the bacteria was found in a clinical specimen from 1943. Many pneumonia outbreaks in different parts of the world that predate 1976 have also been traced to Legionella on examination of archived specimens.

Worldwide prevalence reports for LD have increased with time, likely due to doctors being more aware of the disease and also the availability of better diagnostics. In countries such as Nepal, it is probable that LD infections may now be detected because of increased usage of air-conditioning and other environmental and behavioural reasons.

How can we detect it in a patient? If a person has pneumonia, LD has to be in the differential diagnosis and the symptoms may be very mild to life threatening as was noted in the outbreak at the meeting of the American Legion. Non-specific signs such as fever, cough, diarrhoea, lethargy, and muscle pains may be the first presentations of LD.

The microbiological diagnosis is hard to make in Nepal chiefly due to lack of availability of the tests. But it is true that even in countries where facilities are available, the diagnosis of LD is very often missed because the diagnosis is not entertained and tests are not done; but even where tests are available, the current tests may not be accurate enough.

The simple antigen test in urine is the most commonly used diagnostic method and treatment starts with an antibiotic. Many of the commonly available antibiotics in Nepal such as azithromycin or the newer quinolones are usually effective against LD.

There is no vaccination against this pneumonia like there is for the more common pneumococcal pneumonia - the pneumococcal vaccine which all people over 65 are highly recommended to take once in their lifetime. The pneumococcal vaccine is available in Nepal in many hospitals and clinics.

Sony has always been at the apex or thereabouts of the best television pyramid with the Bravia line of LED TVs especially offering highly desirable screens. The 2014 line of Bravia televisions is no different and the 55 inch W800B 3D LED TV is the jewel in the crown.

The W800B sports an unmistakably stylish Sony design, with its near-invisible jet black bezel standing on a solid silver stand. The bezel that wraps around the edges of the television, with the Bravia logo encased in it, is a true work of art. The bezel and the mantle as the centerpiece of any living room.

The W800B is a stellar TV, high on the most important internet connectivity. The built-in Wi-Fi connects the W800B to the internet. The W800B also sports a comb filter and noise reduction, which ensure that you do not lose video quality during playback. The Energy Star certification means you do not have to worry about the inverter battery running out during load shedding hours. Sound quality on such a slim screen is also admirable with decent sound clarity for movie viewing. The W800B is also a delight for gamers, with its ability to handle fast-paced action at high-refresh rates ideal for your shiny new PlayStation 4.

Retailing for approximately Rs 200,000 and packed with solid features and pleasing design, the Sony Bravia 55W800B is surely a bang-for-the-buck for all the big screen loving gadget-aficionados.

Yantrick’s Verdict: The Sony Bravia 55W800B is a stellar TV, high on performance and with a great set of features and applications, ideal to hold the mantle as the centerpiece of any living room.
Every time you wash your hair, you see the drain clogged with your mane and when you comb your lovely tresses you see strands left behind on the comb. You may try to hide the slightly visible bald patches on your head with a new hairstyle or try one of the hundreds of hair fall products available in the market to solve the problem but the truth is until you get to the root of your problem, the fall won’t stop.

Hair fall is a common problem. I know it can be very frightening and confusing especially when you don’t know what’s causing it.

Here are few causes and remedies for hair fall that will be very handy this winter.

Many factors including thyroid disorders, anemia, chemical treatments of the hair and even genetics cause hair fall. My suggestion is to first contact a dermatologist and get his/her advice.

As we all know hair is made up of a protein called keratin so having a balanced diet with the right blend of proteins, iron and essential vitamins is crucial for hair growth.

With age the body’s capacity to absorb nutrients decreases and hair starts thinning. To ensure your kids remain healthy, intake of soy beans, dairy products, fish, eggs and lots of nuts is a must. You can also take fish oil tablets like seven seas which is rich in omega 3. Personally, I take tablets which have amino acids, as lack of amino acids too causes hair loss.

Change in hormones and stress also cause hair fall. Although hair fall caused due to stress is not permanent, practicing meditation and yoga to de-stress as well as taking deep breaths and drinking water helps keep it in check.

Heredity and prolonged illness is also another cause for hair loss. Chronic diseases like cancer, typhoid and jaundice as well as vitamin B deficiency can trigger hair loss. Beautiful hair is a reflection of good health, so if there is any problem with your general health it reflects on your skin and hair.

Hair fall also occurs if you take medicines on a regular basis. But worry not, hair fall due to medications is temporary.

Excessive use of heated rollers, straighteners and chemical treatments like colouring, perming, rebonding, etc can not only destroy the hair texture, but also cause breakage and split ends.

Dramatic weight loss as well as disorders like anorexia, bulimia are other factors that cause hair loss.

Both men and women might suffer from androgenetic hair loss, but it’s more usually seen in men.

The commonly-seen, coin-shaped hair loss spot is called alopecia areata, which normally recovers by itself.

There are several medications for hair regrowth, for example, finasteride (Propecia), dutasteride (Avodart), and minoxidil (Rogaine).

You can prevent hair fall by several ways, such as pay attention to good hair cleanliness, use regular shampooing, and keep good nutrition for hair.

If you want to check the reason for your hair loss, you should take the blood tests, which includes iron level, vitamin B, thyroid function tests (TFT) and blood count (CBC).

My Favorite Winter Hair Masks

Honey and olive oil for dry hair
Mix 4 tbsp honey with 6 tbsp of olive oil. Leave it on for 15 to 30 minutes. It’s a nurturing mask which will transform your hair.

Egg, Olive oil and avocado mask
Mix one egg, one tbsp olive oil and half an avocado. It adds shine and moisture back into your hair.

Avocado, Olive Oil and Honey
Mash one ripe avocado and add one tbsp of honey and two tbsp of olive oil. Blend it well and apply for 20 minutes. I always prefer to leave it for an hour. You can wrap a plastic bag over it to maximise the effect.

THE FALL OF THE TRESSES

Sneh Rana is a professional Make-Up Artist based in Kathmandu.

Go play with your hair. Dove will take care of the damage.

Also available
Dove Shampoos & Conditioners
The battle of Khara in Rukum on 7 April 2005 dealt a devastating blow to the Maoists, and forced them to reorient their strategy from war to peace. But for Dil Kumari Malla (Darshana) the name ‘Khara’ will always be a painful reminder of where she lost her husband.

Darshana had been married to Dhan Bahadur Pun, a 21-year-old platoon commander, for three years. She was just 18 and they had only spent a couple of months together when Pun was deployed to Bhojpur in eastern Nepal. They had to spend long periods apart without letters or phone calls.

Maoist Chairman Pushpa Kamal Dahal ordered hundreds of guerrillas of his ‘People’s Liberation Army’ to attack the strategic hilltop base of the Royal Nepal Army in Khara. More than 150 were killed in the battle in which the army used night-vision helicopters to repulse the attack. Following the rout, surviving guerrillas retreated to Dalsinge, a remote hamlet in Rukum and had been holed up there for five days when they were caught in a helicopter attack by the army. Four of the guerrillas were killed, including Darshana’s husband.

A company commander ordered Darshana to hand over her two women guerrillas who survived the war, struggle to survive the peace.
Darshana is one of six children of a former soldier in the British Army, and his family had two hectares of paddy fields in Salyan district. In 2002, barely months after the Royal Nepal Army entered the war, Surjit joined the Maoists.

Darshana, for her part, was in Grade 6 at a local school when police came to her house looking for her elder brother who had joined the Maoists. The police pointed to the photograph of her eldest brother, Ranjit Kumar Malla in an Indian Army uniform, and mistakenly thought he was wearing a Maoist combat fatigue. The brutality made even young girls like Darshana think of the police as their enemy, and she eventually joined the Maoists as well. Despite her brother’s insistence that she study to become a doctor, Darshana became part of the wave of thousands of rural boys and girls who swelled the Maoist ranks. Some were forcibly conscripted, but some like Darshana joined voluntarily. “We were inspired by their slogans of radical change in the country,” recalls Darshana, whose commitment to the revolution grew after each battle that she took part in. “We were told that we would have our own state, which would ensure food and shelter to the poor. We were told that rich people’s mansions and homes would be distributed among the homeless.”

Today, the slogans sound hollow to Darshana and dozens of other former Maoist guerrillas who have clustered around their former camps, which are now occupied by Armed Police Force. Nearly 250 former Maoist fighters have settled in Bijauri village near where they fought.

Kamala Oli, 30, was part of a Maoist unit that attacked an armed police base in Bhalubang on the East-West highway, not very far from where she now lives with her two school-going children. Plans for the attack got leaked, and as a result the raid was unsuccessful. Eight Maoists were killed and dozens injured. In the war has now faded from her memory “I had learned how to shoot, how to make bombs, but now I have forgotten everything,” she says. “What’s the use now?”

There are other urgent tasks she has to attend to these days: plucking radishes from the fields, looking after her tiny grocery store. She doesn’t even have time to speak to a journalist who shows up unannounced at her door. Her husband, Dil Bahadur Oli, 30, who like Kamala was injured in the war, is preparing to leave for Malaysia. “He decided to go abroad for the future of our young children,” she says, and disappears into the fields.

Compared to Kamala, life has been harsher on Darshana and she appears angrier. “My husband cannot work because of the war injuries. I have heard of NGOs that support former fighters. But no one cares about us,” she says. “Our leaders keep telling us that they will look after us. But they have done nothing for us. I feel like killing them.”

PEACE BUILDING
Happy Holidays!

Why not give an intriguing gift this holiday season? Soud out by getting your friends and family Himal Southasia.

Himal offers an engaging and informative read on events and issues in Southasia, from Kabul to Kathmandu and Jaffna to Jakarta. In its bookazine format with an extended shelf-life, a gift of Himal will keep you in their thoughts.

Himal is proud to announce the release of its latest issue, “Diaspora: Southasia Abroad” (Vol 27 No 4). Featuring David N Gellner, Rabi Thapa, Muna Garung and others, this issue examines the vast changes in the lives of the people in diaspora communities as well as the shifting perceptions of them in their countries of origin.

To gift a subscription or a single issue (print or digital format), go to himalmag.com/buy-online or email subscriptions@himalmag.com.

www.himalmag.com
Letter to PKD and BRB

Kathmandu Today

I am Sumanth Nepalese (pic), a farmer from Nakhuw which I can’t afford square meal a day. Since I was 12, I have been a day labourer. You probably don’t have time to listen to me and I doubt that even if you do you will do anything about it.

We grew enough food on our land to feed the family, but I sold as a porter to put my eldest son Arjun through school so he got a college degree. Arjun was born in 1975 and after completing his SLC from Law Campus BA/LLB exams.

Nepa’s mother Deeti Gurung (pic above) has been fighting relentlessly to get her two daughters citizenship, but despite repeated visits to the ward office at Lalitpur, Deeti’s citizenship application still hasn’t been attended to.

“Deepti is in a stateless state, joined your revolution will take days to describe. Security forces haven’t waged a war, my son would also have been home and taken

Eighteen-year-old Neha Gurung had dreams to become a doctor. But, when she went to submit her forms for her MBBS entrance exams, she was rejected. Neha was asked to submit her citizenship certificate, but she didn’t have one. So, she had to search for a subject course that didn’t require her to show citizenship papers and went on to get top marks in the KMC entrance exam.

Maoists. My fourth son joined the Maoist army after he completed his SLC and now you have abandoned them. You didn’t offer to shut up. If I kept quiet, they’d taunt me. I was locked up for weeks remembering what they did to me. They looked at my rough farmers’ dead, so he went to Malaysia. I went to

Meena Sharma in her that opportunity. My son may have also done his PhD. I was better off. I also heard that you take your father on a pilgrimage. Prachandaji, you have your family around you.

By the Department of Education, Lalitpur on grounds of failure to produce a birth certificate. It was only after the Supreme Court intervened that her daughter got to sit for her exams. However, Deepti is worried that after completing high school, she will also suffer the same fate as her sister’s.

Deeti who has been in the tourism business for the past 18 years, has had to abandon her job to devote full time to focus on her legal battle with the state. She filed a writ to procure citizenship certificate for her daughters, and the hearing is on 8 January.

“Let’s see what the Supreme Court’s decision is,” she says.

Although Nepal’s Interim Constitution 2006 and Nepal Citizenship Act 2006 provides for citizenship under the mother’s name, it remains largely unimplemented, leaving many like Deepti and her daughters without an identity, citizenship and travel documents.

Sami Thapa, a divorcée has been to the KMC ward number 29 office multiple times but even with her marriage registration certificate, divorce papers, copies of her ex-husband’s citizenship and her own citizenship in place, she has been unable to obtain an infant identity card for her son.

“They refused to issue the identification card saying that my husband will take my son once he turns 16,” says Thapa.

Dhawkar Chhetri, a well-known cartoonist also knows what it’s like to be humiliated by government authorities, when trying to get a citizenship through the mother.

“I applied for a citizenship certificate 23 years ago at District Administration Office, Lalitpur. But they humiliated me saying I was a child born to an unmarried mother,” says the 40-year-old.

“After that I couldn’t muster the courage to go back there again.”

In the absence of a citizenship certificate he hasn’t been able to buy land, open a bank account, get a driving license or even continue his education. His case for a citizenship has been pending in the Supreme Court for the past two years.

Arjun Kumar Sah, 25, an MBA student at Himalayan White House College couldn’t go to Bangkok on an educational tour because he didn’t have a passport. Without a citizenship certificate, he will also not be eligible for internships at corporate houses.

“I don’t know what to do,” says Sah, who has been making the rounds of the District Administration Office in Mahottari ever since he turned 18. He filed a writ at the Supreme Court on February, 2013. His hearing is scheduled for 12 January this year and he has his fingers crossed.

It is not only the children of divorced mothers who are struggling to obtain citizenship certificates. Those born out of rape, prostitution and live-in relationships face the same difficulties. According to Menaka Thapa, president of Raksha Nepal, an NGO working for sexually exploited women and their children, most of Raksha Nepal children do not have birth certificates meaning it will be next to impossible to obtain a citizenship.

Letter to PKD and BRB

In a stateless state

by the Department of Education, Lalitpur on grounds of failure to produce a birth certificate. It was only after the Supreme Court intervened that her daughter got to sit for her exams. However, Deepti is worried that after completing high school, she will also suffer the same fate as her sister’s.

Deepti who has been in the tourism business for the past 18 years, has had to abandon her job to devote full time to focus on her legal battle with the state. She filed a writ to procure citizenship certificate for her daughters, and the hearing is on 8 January.

“Let’s see what the Supreme Court’s decision is,” she says. Although Nepal’s Interim Constitution 2006 and Nepal Citizenship Act 2006 provides for citizenship under the mother’s name, it remains largely unimplemented, leaving many like Deepti and her daughters without an identity, citizenship and travel documents.

Sami Thapa, a divorcée has been to the KMC ward number 29 office multiple times but even with her marriage registration certificate, divorce papers, copies of her ex-husband’s citizenship and her own citizenship in place, she has been unable to obtain an infant identity card for her son.

“They refused to issue the identification card saying that my husband will take my son once he turns 16,” says Thapa.

Dhawkar Chhetri, a well-known cartoonist also knows what it’s like to be humiliated by government authorities, when trying to get a citizenship through the mother.

“I applied for a citizenship certificate 23 years ago at District Administration Office, Lalitpur. But they humiliated me saying I was a child born to an unmarried mother,” says the 40-year-old.

“After that I couldn’t muster the courage to go back there again.” In the absence of a citizenship certificate he hasn’t been able to buy land, open a bank account, get a driving license or even continue his education. His case for a citizenship has been pending in the Supreme Court for the past two years.

Arjun Kumar Sah, 25, an MBA student at Himalayan White House College couldn’t go to Bangkok on an educational tour because he didn’t have a passport. Without a citizenship certificate, he will also not be eligible for internships at corporate houses.

“I don’t know what to do,” says Sah, who has been making the rounds of the District Administration Office in Mahottari ever since he turned 18. He filed a writ at the Supreme Court on February, 2013. His hearing is scheduled for 12 January this year and he has his fingers crossed.

It is not only the children of divorced mothers who are struggling to obtain citizenship certificates. Those born out of rape, prostitution and live-in relationships face the same difficulties. According to Menaka Thapa, president of Raksha Nepal, an NGO working for sexually exploited women and their children, most of Raksha Nepal children do not have birth certificates meaning it will be next to impossible to obtain a citizenship.
SHANGRI-LA
KATHMANDU
Presents
NEW YEAR’S EVE
party
Tap your toes to the beat of
DJ RAJU
&
Shake your hip to the rhythm of
INTERNATIONAL BELLY DANCERS
Live Dance Performance,
Lavish Gala Dinner, Attractive Door Prizes

Venue: Garden Pavilion, Hotel Shangri-La
Date: 31st December 2014
Time: 8 pm Onwards
Rates: Single: NRS. 5999/- nett
Couple: NRS. 9999/- nett

For Reservation:
4412999/9803390208
* Limited seats only
* Arrangement of adequate valet parking service
* Covered Hall
* Warm Environment
* Tax Service at fixed price

SHANGRI-LA
VILLAGE
Pokhara
Préntes
NEW YEAR’S EVE
party
Live Performance by
CINEY GURUNG
Lavish Gala Dinner, Attractive Door Prizes
and many more...

Venue: Shangrila Village Resort, Pokhara
Date: 31st December 2014
Time: 8 pm Onwards
Rates: Single: NRS. 3500/- nett
Couple: NRS. 5500/- nett

For Reservation:
061462222, 9856022272
* Limited seats only
* Arrangement of adequate valet parking service
* Covered Hall
* Warm Environment
* Tax Service at fixed price
High resolutions

As we approach 31 December, the question humanity must ponder is whether it is really such a good idea to embark on a new year at this juncture. Do we actually want to go through another 365 days of this? If your answer is in the affirmative, and you have made up your mind to take the bull by the horns of a dilemma in a chino shop, then let me compliment you on your courage, shake you by the hand, and wish you god speed.

And for that you will need the Donkey’s blessings for 2015. May your days in the new year be filled with joy, prosperity, happiness, and the new year be filled with for 2015. May your days in data plan that won’t drive your family to starvation, and a new constitution by the end of the Quaternary Epoch. Without naming names, there are among you valued readers of this column some chronic pessimists who like to wallow in hopelessness. You see a new year approaching, and you insist on looking at 2015 as a glass half-empty. And then there are perennial optimists like yours truly who will stagger across to the bar and get myself a refill.

Given the way things are going in Nepal and our immediate vicinity, I have decided to pay my dues as a life member of the Nepali Bar Association which means you will find me most evenings this week at the friendly neighbourhood watering hole nursing a double Black Dog on rocks, and already well on my way to fulfilling my personal new year resolution which is to make an even more complete ass of myself in 2015 than I already am.

My other new year resolutions (which are copyright, protected by the International Biopiracy Covenant, and may not be reproduced, stored in, or introduced into a retrieval system, and transmitted in any form electronic, mechanical, photocopying or by telepathy) are:

- To be grouchly and cantankerous throughout the coming year. After all, what is there to be cheerful about?
- To be a teetotaler by totally avoiding tea since it causes ulcers.
- To be a non-violent person, I will let the driver off.
- To spend less time aimlessly stalking people on Facebook this year, and switch to Candy Crush Saga. Like it or not, the new year is upon us and, like it or not, tradition demands that we all come up with new year resolutions, or face the consequences thereof. I have been going around the past few days asking important Nepalis to tell me completely off the record what their resolutions, if any, are:

Assembly Chair Nembang: “Try not to do today what can be done tomorrow.”

UCPML Chair Comrade Awesome: “Become president by hook or by crook. Mostly by crook.”

Comrade Baluram: “Have more followers on Twitter than in my party.”

Prime Minister Jhusil Da: “Try not to do anything in 2015. If a government does nothing, nothing can go wrong.”

KP Oily: “Tell all foreign hands that they needn’t bother trying to destabilise our country, we’re doing that just fine by ourselves.”

Bijay the Gutch: “We will meet our nationwide bandt targets to ensure the government machinery is well-rested, and functions smoothly in 2015.”

Comrade Energy Minister: “What? There are still some mega hydropower projects that are nearing completion in 2015? Quick, cancel their contracts and extort them!”

NEA Chief: “Reduce danger of high voltage electrocution by increasing load-shedding in rural areas to 24 hr/d.”

Comrade Big Plop: “Try not to learn any lessons from the history and move onward with the great proletarian revolution and the strategic counter-retaliation offensive campaign against running dog imperialists and their blood-thirsty begemnistic expansionist reactionary fascist monopols.”

Dog loitering at the BICC premises: “Being a son of a bitch, I guess I’ll strive to be an even greater son of a bitch in the new year.”

Think I’ll join POLITICS instead!